England Really Prosperous.

(London Times, August 15.) We must repeat then that there can be no greater mistake at the present time than to speak generally of the trade of the United Kingdom as depressed. It is a common saying among shrewd and experienced men in the city, who have seen many ups and downs in trade, that business is seldom so good as when prices and ness is seldom so good as when prices and wages are low, and the exports are at a nominally low level, and everybody is more or less complaining. The reason is that at such a time there is no inflation; that merchants and manufacturers are that the complaining is the complaining of the complaining of the complaining is the complaining of the complaining
