GREAT BATTLE BETWEEN THE DANES AND GERMANS.

Since our last open hostilities have broken out between the Danes and Germans. All the efforts of peaceful mediators must be abortive when one party is resolved to commit an act of aggression. We are not surprised the Danes commenced hostile operations the moment the armistice was concluded, and whatever may be the temporary fortune of war, where justice is supported by power there need be no fear of the result. The Danes entered Sleswig from Jutland, and occupied Appenrade and Hadersleben; another body crossed over from Alsen, whilst a squadron of Danish vessels consisting of the Christian VIII. (84 guns), the Gefion frigate (42 guns), a brig and some steamers attacked the batteries in the bay of Eckernforde on the 5th inst. Part of this squadron entered the harbour, and after a cannonade on both sides for several hours, the Steamer Geyser silenced the land batteries. The Christian VIII. unfortunately grounded, and the Gefion had her rudder shot away. A truce was offered and two hours were granted. In this interval the Germans got the southern battery in order, the 36 gun ship was got off, and hostilities recommenced. The Christian VIII., however, again got around, and finally was set on fire by the red hot shot from the batteries. Endeavours were made by the Germans to save her and her crew after her surrender, and that of the Gefion, but only 400 men were saved, and the line of battle ship at length, exploded with more than 200 men on board. Out of the Gefion 230 were saved, but the rest perished. It is said that the Germans had but one man killed and 13 wounded. The humanity of the Germans, under the Duke of Saxe Coburg, in saving the lives of the unfortunate Danes is spoken of in the highest praise. The Danes hold out nobly to the last. The Christian VIII. burnt 10 hours before she exploded. The loss of life has been very great, and the Germans have taken 1050 prisoners. The skirmishing by the land forces has been but inconsiderable. We dread, however, the effect of this great advantage amongst the Germans. We fear that it will only stimulate them to fresh exertions; and knowing well how fatal their successes may be to them eventually, we deplore the renewal of this war far more than any other event which is now clouding the history of Europe.—Already numerous captures of German merchant vessels by the Danes have taken place, and the ports of Cammin, Swinemunde, Wolgast, Greifswalde, Stralsund, Rostock, Pillau, and the Danzic, together with the Elbe, Weser, and Ems, are now all blockaded, and the injury inflicted on merchants is incalculable. German vessels coming from America, Asia, and Africa have taken refuge in the English ports in the channel.

The Danes are stated to have captured twenty eight German ships.

IRELAND.

The second trial, or attempted trial, of C. G. Duffy, under the Treason Felony Act, commenced on the 10th instant.—The Attorney and Solicitor-Generals, Messrs. Baldwin, Q. C., Plunkett, Q. C., Perrin, and Pennefather, appeared for the Crown; and Messrs. Butt, Q. C., Napier, Q. C., and O'Hagan, for the prisoner. On this occasion the solicitor for the defence was allowed to take a copy of the jury panel, a concession which saved the court, no doubt, from floods of eloquence and great delay. The panel, which contained the names of 180 persons, having been called over three times, and 87 gentlemen answered to their names, the swearing in of a jury was proceeded with, and occupied the court up to half-past two o'clock.

The trial had not terminated when our last despatch left Dublin. It is confidently expected that they will not agree.

The Most Rev. Dr. Crolly, the Roman Catholic Primate, expired on the 6th instant in Drogheda, after an attack of cholera of nine hours' duration. The deceased prelate was highly esteemed by men of all religious persuasions, being ever remarkable for Christian liberality towards his dissenting fellow-countrymen, and love of peace and order. Dr. Crolly was a warm supporter of the national system of education, and, indeed, of every measure which tended to the progress of enlightenment.—He was about 70 years of age.

The sale of effects at Conciliation Hall, took place on Wednesday. The business opened gloomily enough: office desks, library shelves, gas fittings, and copying machines were knocked down at the most unpatriotic prices. Everybody said that everything was "sacrificed;" but nobody seemed disposed to set a relic price upon any article until the auctioneer came to the lot thus described in the posters:—"A full set of band instruments, of best workmanship, made specially for the Association, consisting of two cornopeans, two valve horns two valve trumpets, six clarionets, four flutes, three trombones, two opheclieides, one pair of symbals, one bass drum, and one brass side drum." By this time the natural humour of the denizens of Liffey street and Bride's Alley broke out, and, as if by pre arrangement, a cross fire of jokes were interchanged between the company, which the eloquent remonstrances of the auctioneer could not arrest for the space of three minutes. Here is something like a report of what may be deemed the last meeting in the old room of the Repeal Association:—The Auctioneer: Gentlemen, what shall I say for this splendid opheicleide? It was provided by order of the late immortal liberator, who was particularly fond of wind instruments, and—— Broker: Devil a doubt of that.—He was the lad to make himself heard (laughter, and cries of "shame"). Auctioneer: Gentlemen, I hope if you don't respect the place you're in, you will, at all events, not treat lightly (cries of "go on, go on") this splendid opheicleide, and make—— A voice: Is it in tune? Auctioneer: Yes, I'll engage it in good order, and if you doubt me, take it and try. Voices: That's all fair. Here a man looking fellow seized the burly instrument and blew a note loud enough to wake the seven sleepers —a feat which excited considerable mirth in the crowd. The performer coolly handed it back with the observation, "That's too flat" (laughter). The opheicleide was knocked down "a dead bargain," and several other instruments shared a similar fate. One of the cornopeans being set up, a crabbed little fellow observed, "That was Master John's favourite trumpet." "How do you know, Murty?" "Bekase it is so cruckad." "In troth you're right, Murty; that is thing for the "chune the auld cow died of" (laughter, with exhortations from the auctioneer to respect the place they were in, which had but little effect upon the jokers, who thus rattled away). "Gentlemen, do attend to the sale, and give up your joking, which is quite out of place, and—" A voice: "I beg your parding, sir, but may be you know young cows died of square music afore now, as well as auld." "Gentlemen, I wont stand this any longer. Will you offer for the cornopean?" It was bought, and this finished the band of the Loyal National Repeal Association.

IMPORTANT INVENTION FOR STOPPING STEAM ENGINES.—A Bradford correspondent says—"On Wednesday last, through the kindness of Messrs. Smith and Cooth, manufacturers, Southgate, we had an opportunity of witnessing on their premises the working of a simple piece of machinery, by means of which a steam engine of 30 horse power was stopped almost instantaneously. We were taken to one end of a spinning-room when the machinery of the whole mill was in full operation, with the steam engine at full speed, when a valve was opened which admitted the atmospheric air, which instantly choked the condenser of the engine, shut off the throttle and water valves, and opened the blow valves. The instant this was done the fly wheel only made one revolution and a quarter. In the ordinary manner of stopping the engine, the fly-wheel makes five revolutions before it can be brought to a stand. So plain is this simple piece of mechanism, that although the whole machinery throughout the mill is stopped so suddenly, not a single thread is broken, but all remains ready for resuming work when the engine is again set in motion. This wonderful and useful discovery is the invention of James Mills, of Horton, the engine tender at the mill in which it is now in operation, and reflects the highest credit on his ingenuity as a hard working mechanic.

A FIRE BRIGADE IN DUBLIN.—A Fire Brigade, composed of young men of the Police Force, whose dexterity and physical ability had been tested under the discipline of Colonel Brown, has been formed in Dublin, and a first trial of their efficiency made on Saturday last, in the square at the police barracks in Kevin-street. No experiment could be more successful than this first display of the fire-men, nor anything more satisfactory than the rapidity and precision with which they paraded, and the skill with which they applied the powers of a newly-constructed fire-engine, in the propulsions of water to a height sufficient to command the greatest elevation in the City. In the engine, although not varying from the principle of those hitherto in use, yet there are several valuable improvements introduced, by which the power of propulsion is considerably increased, and the facility for its adaption to the fire-plug, designed by Alderman Gavin, rendered speedy and effective. A numerous assemblage of persons of distinction were present to witness the first experiment of the Fire Brigade in working their own new engine. To Colonel Brown is due the thanks of the citizens of Dublin for the zeal and ability displayed by the gallant colonel in establishing a Fire Brigade, which, for efficiency in all its departments, is second to none other in the Empire.

REMARKABLE CURE OF ASTHMA.—Jeremiah Casey, residence at 1, Compton place Brunswick-square, had suffered from a chronic asthma, for more than three years. This poor man was so great a sufferer, that he did not dare to go to bed for fear of the phlegm choking him; indeed he could not even lay his head upon a table for half an hour, lest he should be suffocated.—Nevertheless, this person is now labouring from morning till night, sleeps as well ever he did in his life, and, in fact, is completely cured by the use of Holloway's pills and ointment.
