

THE WRACK OF THE GOOD SHIP "FAITH."

Thanks be to the great Head of the Church, who has sent many of His heralds forth to declare the whole counsel of God's Word to the heathen.

tion. What if, having preached to men, I myself should be a castaway? Preacher I'd never be; but by Thy grace I'd be the ship constructed and launched, and went forth upon her career.

Now let us unweave the wreck. It is very distressing sight. On almost every coast you see the remains of some fine craft. The iron stanchions are twisted into iron corkscrews, the ribs are rising, the bulwarks are battered with each successive wave.

What about her career? Well, most of us it has been a good and happy time, at least for a while. You go into the service of the King, when God builds her up for you; or you are in the merchant service; there are no pleasure yachts. God doesn't convert a man that he may enjoy himself.

There is one sin which is everywhere undervalued, and quite too much overlooked in valuation of character. It is the sin of fretting. It is as common as air, as speech; so common that, unless it rises above its usual monotony, we do not even observe it.

His popularity began with the first sermon he ever delivered, although that was quite an impromptu address. As soon as he accepted the pastorate of the little Baptist church at Water beach near Cambridge, his fame spread far and wide, and a certain church sent for the "boy preacher" as he was then called, to preach the event and again.

Long, long before he ever thought of preaching, he one day saw a deacon of his grandfather's church, in a place where he laid thought he ought not to have been. The boy walked up to him, and said, "What are you doing here, and what do you think of it?"
