Charred Identity Discs End of Battle in the Air

British Aviator, on First Trip Across Channel, Engages in Fight in Clouds with Taube—Bombs, Grenades, Rifles and Machine Guns in Use.

Crossing from Salisbury Plain to join the British forces in France, an aeroplane observer, telling of his first cross Channel flight, describes a battle he and his pilot had with a German plane en route, which ended in the German being brought to earth.

For a time they were in the clouds, when they suddenly heard, though they could not see, the buzz of a biplane on their starboard below. Just as suddenly as they found themselves enveloped in the cloud bank they burst clear into dazzling sunlight. Then the writer proceeds:—

"As we cleared we were astonished to find that we were in a straight line, which was following approximately the same course. The huge sloping side planes, the double undercarriage and the omnibus crosses showed him to be a German 'Extension-Taube.' We had the speed on him, and gained rapidly that we were right above him before he noticed us. He then dipped outward and began to climb like a snail. On the instant he was left of the German observer opened fire with a Mauser. He was too wide to get even the planes. We circled for his blind side and got out machine gun on my pilot stood our machine on the very tip of his left wing and she poised magnificently as I ranged on the Hun. Our machine gun was obviously unexpected, because after a few rounds the Taube went into what was almost a nose dive and made for the clouds below.

"Three Minutes to Live."

"The engine was now throbbing terribly. The pilot gave her three minutes to live. It was a time for desperate measures. The German, having come away from his leap across us, was now circling in an endeavor to bomb us. We steered out to sea, three nifty bombs of high explosive and tore through the planes, but fortunately none found a vital spot. The connecting wire had been liberated. And the Hun as soon as he thought of it unsatisfactory. Collette Mig. Company, Collingwood, Ont.
