An Evening Out

with Roger Doris

The El Caribe is dead, but the Mississauga Inn is alive and well. You may recall the El Caribe, it was located on the south-west corner of Dundas and Wharton Way. It never quite made it, and was sold to John Nestor and Danny Nedelkos, who have renamed it the Mississauga Inn. They have broadloomed the entire room, added drapes and many other items of decor, turning it into a nice dine and dance club.

They are certainly no newcomers to the food trade, as John was associated with Nestor's Restaurant at Queensway and Islington for 17 years.

They have instituted a system and a price structure that I certainly hope works out, because both the owners and the customers will be the winners.

Johnny explained to me that when he set his low priced menu, he based it on a volume business, and if the public wanted lower prices and would support his venture, that is the way the prices would stay.

Johnny said, "I think that in many cases the customer is getting ripped-off in paying some of the huge prices demanded today. I have kept my prices down and still supply top quality food, and if I get the support of the public, they can still afford to dine out at
