Of this we are perfectly certain; facts are stubborn things, and just the weapons with which we, Annexationists, intend to combat "the sentimental loyalty" of such journalists as the Spectator. Facts, and very hard facts, too, the facts of decaying trade, depreciated property, empty pockets, and rapidly approaching social disorganization staring them in the face, are urging on this movement, which is an distastsful to the Spectator.

Mr. Holmes, says the Spectator, goes on : -

It would be could to see the first Riding of York following a symptometry of the first Riding of York following a symptometry of the first Riding of York following a symptometry of the first Riding in repudiating limitarial distation. Poor Lord Elgin,! The cord of his Ministers will soon be thought as file of as his owner-self-could be the first repudiating the first of the first repudiation o hibitory duty on their manufactures, as it is for them to exclude our produce? The rule will work both ways, and we trust that no time can be least in putting it in force. The benefits of such a prohibition would be experienced more fully at the Port of Montreal than any other place in the country. So much for Mr. Holmes' arguments. Let us glance at his figures:

"The hardy lumber-man goes hundreds of miles into the uninhabited wilds, and fells the tree, which is transported to Quebee, and sold in the shape of a square logiton sate to sa foot. It is sent to England at cost of the same of the transported to Quebee, and sold in the shape of a square logiton sate to sa foot. Vast quantities of Lumber are required in the United States markets, but to send it there the lumber-man must submit to 30 per cent. tax."

"In the first extract we have made from this gentleman's speech, he asserts that the repeal of the Navigation Laws will 'enable us to send flour and timber to England at half the charge higherto exacted from us." Why, then, complain of a disadvantage which will be removed in a couple of months? And, by adopting a retaliatory policy toward the United States, we can as readily compel them to take our lumber as our wheat. Besides, if the article is required by the American ship-builder, he will not long submit to a tax of 20 per cent., which is equally divided between himself and the Canadian lumberman."

Is it possible that any man can be found insane mough to suppose that the United States can be forced into granting reciprocity ? We think we hear the roar of laughter resounding from Maine to Mexico, from the twenty-one millions of sturdy Republicans, at the idea of being "forced" into any thing. The Spectator does not appear to be acquainted with the genius of the American Jonathan wants Canada, - but it is a of his policy to appear very indifferent bout it, and this for many good reasons; and if he thinks that the refusal of Reciprocity and the maintainance of a high Tariff will increase the prospect of Annexation, why the Canadians may whistle for it. The silly Spectafor talks of a retaliatory policy on our part, keen the Americans from taking the lumber which they now This old parties in Upper Canada, through their do, or grain, or cattle, or any little things we have to send them ! The views of the Niagara District Municipal Council, with respect to the Annexation movement, are clearly expressed in the annexed Resolution, passed by them:—

MT DEAR Str.,—I was somewhat amused, as well as surprised, at your honoring me with a letter, through the Montreed Gazette, relating to the Annexation meeting, over which I had presided the preceding day.

It is a prevalent opinion in the United States, that if a man spirce to the office of President, he should never write a letter, as by so doing he is certain to damage his cause, sind to diminish materially his chances of success, and you are doubtless aware of some instances which have been consist to establish the truth of the remark. Now, my dear Sir, if you wish to be the set Governor of Canada, after your elective principle is established, let me advise you not to write any more letters, for if you have not already injured your cause beyond hope of recovery, another letter like the last would certainly finish you out. As you have set me the example of giving gratuitous advice, I would also further recommend these grantiemen, when you are men against gather and accritica for their who, you say, are making such great sacrimers for their country, to consider well, whether, after all, they would not be as well at home, looking after their business, as attending meetings of the League, which is not likely ever to be a very "great fact," or writing letters to Annexationists who do not seem capable of appreciating true

There is a feeling creeping through society that the French question, far from being settled, is in an unsatisfactory position. Ever since Jackson extracted the indemnity from France, there has been a soreness of feeling on the part of that country—and the Americans, on the other hand, are amoyed at the mode and manner of payment—they suffered a shave in the transaction.

Napoleon, since his election, has betrayed a leaning towards the despotisms of Europe, which developed itself when the Roman Republic was crushed. This last act has been denounced by the American Press, in terms of bitter heatility. France pants for war. Her President looks to war as a means whereby he may propitiate the army, prolong his tenure of office, or exchange his Presidency for a Throne. Now the United States are almost the only Power with whom France could wage a war, that would not be injurious to herself, and would not provoke the interference of the European Powers. France is vain of her Navy, and longs for an occasion to wipe away the recollection of the Nile and Trafalgar. Her commercial marine is insignificant. France has assumed the tone and attitude of menace of the bully towards every weaker Power; towards the United States, her conduct has not been satisfactory.

The Americans will not shun the conflict—
