While it belongs to the sensa tional class, and abounds in thrills and action, and dramatic situations, it is said to be a logical story, clearly told with none of the impossible incidents often used to bolster a complicated plot. The story begins on a mountain top at a little summ erhotel where is found David Morton, exgraduate of Harvard, who on account of his failing health, has become a mountain guide. Elsie, beautiful and pure, the ward of the villainous owner of the hotel is there. They learn to love each other, these two, but the miserly Geoffrey, covets the girl whom he has reared for his own purposesi after separating her father and mother and their courtship is a stormy one Assisted by Giovanni Lombarda, a bear trainer, who he has brought from the Australian diamond fields, Geoffrey accuses Morton of theft, and once he has been thrown into jail, kidna, s him and takes him to a cave on the mountains where is kept the bear owned by Lombarda the Italian. South Africa are an important relief in London that will surely be reflect-ed here. Money has ruled firm and bank reserves are low, but currency will soon return from the interior and easier rates and rising reserves may be anticipated until the crop demands begin in July. There is plenty of money in the West, and considering the large increase in the domestic production of gold the shipment of a few millions to Europe should cause no real concern. There is fair reason to hope that in spite of occasional signs of reaction we shall have anothall kinds of manufactured products is still going on at an unprecedented scale, and high prices do not yet seem to have checked demand. Railroad earnings continue to show liberal gains over the phenomenal returns of last year; and if the harvest of 1902 should prove to be an average one, general business is likely to continue on a liberal scale.
