A Tangled Web

BY MRS. ALEXANDER

Author of "Beaton's Bargain," "His Perfect Trust,"
"By Another Name," "Her Heart's Idol,"
"Half a Truth," "His Rival."

"At a station midway to Paris he got out, a small valise in his hand. The detective followed. It was early afternoon, and a few passengers were waiting. The suspected thief went into a first-class carriage, with small dark mustaches, a low-crowned brown hat, such as Englishmen wear in the country, and a long loose overcoat. He came out at a station some ten miles off in a sort of frock coat, rather shabby, braided and fitting badly, a soft black felt hat pulled over his eyes and a large light mustache; his overcoat was hanging on his arm, and he still carried his valise. There he waited some time, reading a paper, which he held before his face, and finally, as it began to grow dark, he took a third-class ticket to Paris, my employee traveled in the same carriage," she turned a page. "It is too long to tell her he tracked him that night to an obscure street in the Marais, to the shop of a Polish Jew dealer in precious stones, where he had a long party, and he saw back to a shabby cafe, where he engaged a room for the night—he went to it, after partaking of some wine and food. When his pursuer had ascertained that he was locked in for the night, he returned to the shop—I ought to have told you, the man was himself the son of a Polish Jew, and spoke the language well. He made himself known to the owner of the shop, told some story of having been on the outlook for jewels, and, in short, persuaded his companion to let him hide in a corner, where he could witness the interview arranged for next day. I am dwelling too much on details, perhaps! Ultimately my employee witnessed the sale of ten large unset rubies for a price, which, though high, was not enough for their value, and he saw the face of the man who sold them."

"Indeed!" with a slightly contemptuous accent, "and may I ask what was your client?"

"There it is," cried Mrs. Ruthven, raising her voice for the first time above the level tone at which she had kept it, and drawing her breath in a deep sob, as she took out of a small leather case, and threw to her a diamond stud. He had grown perfectly colorless, but the hand with which he took up the stud was steady.

"And what does this prove?" he asked.

"That Clifford Marsden, of Evesleigh Manor, is a felon!" she answered, force exultation lighting up her face, and gleaming in her eyes. "Do you think I did not recognize the peculiar setting of the diamond which caught my hair in that walk—that walk?"

"I know I lost this stud," said the unlucky evening, and never could find it; but why should not the robber have picked it up, if he found it, as we have probably did, in the tent?"

"You are a brave man to face me as you do!" she exclaimed. "But I told you in my hand," and she clinched it. "I will tell you who found it, and where! Your sweet, beloved daughter, when paying me a private visit in my room, snatching my ball-dress, espied the glitter of that diamond among the lace on the body, where it had dropped when you struggled to stupefy me with your horrible chloroform. Me, the woman you had been making love to ten minutes before—who was ready to give you all she had—you base midnight thief!"

"Do not be so positive. Might it not have fallen among your lace as we danced together, or when I was assisting to lift you?"

"No, no, no!" she cried, as if carried out of herself, and speaking with immense rapidity. "I saw it on your breast when you left me, and Nora, your Nora, told me you never touched me! It is useless denying your guilt. Waiter, the detective, know you. He was with you at Amsterdam, in Paris, at Chantilly, when you went to your sick friend De Maudouin. He tracked you, he can swear to you, I have said hundreds to prove it, and I have you in my grasp!"

"She stopped, panting. Marsden rose slowly, his eyes fixed upon her. She was frightened by his silence, his desperate look. She, too, rose, but her fury seemed to evaporate.

"What are you going to do, Marsden?" she asked, quivering. "You would not murder me?"

"He laughed a strange, discordant laugh. "I am blackguard enough," he said; "but I would not hurt a hair of your head. No! It is useless to contradict your assertions. You have me, indeed, in your grasp, and there is but one way of escape."

"He moved to the door, but she was too quick for him. Setting her back against it she stretched out her arms to keep him off. "You shall not leave me!"

"What is life to me?" asked Marsden, with a calm despair. "A dishonoring shackle! The sooner I am rid of it the better. I can not struggle with you. If you have any pity, let me go!"

"You are a woman any man might love," he said, "and as you wisely admit that men can love two or more (we are generally broader than women, some women), you shall have all the love left in me, of my life-long gratitude you may be sure. You are making a sorry bargain, I warn you. I shall never be the same again, but if you care to be Mrs. Marsden of Evesleigh, so be it!"

"Ah! you are simply selling yourself! And what a price I pay!"

"Not by Heaven! I am grateful, and I always admired you! Even that night, when I clasped your neck, I felt inclined to kiss the pretty white throat that was so velvet soft to my acridulous touch."

"And why did you not? Had you brought back consciousness by your kiss and confided your difficulties to me, all would have been well!" cried the infuriated woman, throwing herself into his arms.

"For the moment Marsden was moved and really grateful, though a bitter sense of being sold into slavery tinged his feelings of relief. "How could you be so fascinated by Nora L'Estrange?" asked Mrs. Ruthven, still leaning against him and looking up in his face. "She never could understand you as I do, she never could share your feelings as I can."

"She is what she is," said he shortly, "and has been an infinite misfortune to me."

"I am glad you see it," Mrs. Ruthven sat down on the sofa and signed to him to sit beside her. "I trust you, Marsden!" looking intently into his face. "I think so. Dictate your own terms, settle everything on yourself—everything of mine that is available. I shall never feel more than a dependent on your charity."

"Do you remember an engineer, a Mr. Colville, calling here and speaking to me of his little girl, who was my god-daughter?"

Chamberlain's Colic Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy.

The uniform success of this remedy has made it the most popular preparation in use for bowel complaints. It is everywhere recognized as the one remedy that can always be depended upon and that is pleasant to take. It is especially valuable in summer diarrhoea in children and is undoubtedly the means of saving the lives of a great many children each year. For sale by A. McNeill McDonald.

ROSEVILLE

The weather has been very fine for the past few days and the crops of hay etc. are growing well.

A school picnic was held near the public landing on the 25th day of June. Quite a number of friends from the different parts assembled and enjoyed themselves to the full extent. The funds raised were for the school.

Mrs. W. Simon of Indian Cove is the guest of Mrs. J. Fugion.

Mrs. Simpson took a flying visit to the Basin Tuesday.

The Rev. Halpin who having finished his time on this side of the bay has moved to the Basin. We all hope to see him on this side again and that will give us a sermon in our little parish church once more.

Mr. Machon who is very old and feeble is confined to the house in a state of illness and is not expected to survive very long.

CAPE DESPAIR

We are having splendid weather at present although a good shower would not come amiss to the crops.

The commercial travellers have again commenced their tour taking all orders although business is very dull at present yet they do not seem discouraged.

Mrs. Windsor gave a very enjoyable picnic on the sands Saturday last after the children had enjoyed a bountiful repast they made a very pretty picture wading along the shore while waiting for the boat to return and party after party took turns in a row, it was very much enjoyed and appreciated by all.

Great regret was felt in our little community at the departure of our popular teacher, Miss Bossy, by her good will and never failing good temper she endeavored herself to all alike. We hope she may have the greatest success in her new sphere of life and keep a spot in her memory green for the friends she left behind.

A great many visitors are now making their appearance in our little village.

At the parsonage Miss Edith Taverne and Miss Smith a trained nurse from U. S. A. are spending a few weeks the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Kerr.

We are pleased to welcome again in our midst the smiling face of Mr. J. Gaudin after an absence of about three years. Hope you will have a pleasant time Jack.

A very pleasant evening was spent at the residence of Mr. Adolphus Beckett Mr. John Gaudin gave quite a treat with his photography the front hall was brilliantly illuminated. Mr. Gaudin took great pains to entertain his caller. We do not see photographs every day.

We are happy to inform our readers that Mr. Eddy Beck seems to be greatly benefited by his native air. We are very sorry to miss the smiling face of his sister Miss Emma as her visit was such a brief one.

Sunshine Furnace
Flues Easily Cleaned
Cleaning out the flues of most furnaces is so difficult and complicated that only an expert can do it, and experts' services usually come high.
The flues in the Sunshine Furnace can be cleaned from two different clean-out doors and from the feed-door, so that there is no part of the flues which is not easily reached.
A special brush for this purpose is always supplied, and the operation is so simple that a boy can perform it.
The whole Sunshine Furnace construction is on the same plan of simplicity.
Sold by all enterprising dealers. Write for booklet.
