Che Poet's Corner. My King, My King.

He is standing somewhere, my Eing, I know. With the glory of manhood upon his brow. And a light of love in his eyes ;

I know not when or where we shall meet. But this I know, that his form I will greet With a loving and glad surprise.

He may come in the morning, bright and fair, When the sunlight-kisses my gold brown hair, And crown me for his Queen ; Or yet he may come at the twilight hour, hat magic hour of love's sweet power, The daylight and starlight between. It matters not when, and it matters not

My King shall come to claim my vow Of allegiance fond and true; But when he comes, this King of mine. With his royal heart and a right divine, He shall find me loyal too.

I will not picture his form or lace. Nor a single king v lineament trace Nor his ancestry humble or great , But he must be free from reproach or
