Forty Years in the Public Service—the Evening Telegram.

Against the Kaiser's Trial.

"The worst of all ways of dealing with the Kaiser is to bring him before a leisured tribunal in London," states the Outlook. "There is no precedent for applying the common law of England to a foreign ruler, and a precedent created might operate very awkwardly in future. But there is a very good precedent for dealing with a European nuisance—the precedent of Napoleon; and that might very well be followed in this case."

The "Law Journal's" Protest.

The Law Journal declares that "the so-called trial of the ex-Kaiser" is a political act pure and simple.

"It possesses no foundation whatever either in the principles common to all the jurisprudence of the world, or in any known body of law, or in any recognized code of procedure. The charge is drawn with that astute vagueness of which only the modern politician, with his eye on the electorate, is capable, the offences alleged being 'against humanity and the sanctity of treaties.' In other words, the justice to be administered is at present undefined, unformulated, and adaptable in advance to any conceivable situation. An attempt is being made, by mounting this piece of political play-acting in quasi-legal trappings, to pretend to the world that some questions of law is involved in which some persons holding judicial office will take part, and so give an appearance of legality to the proceedings. It is necessary, therefore, to make it clear that, to jurists and the legal profession generally, the whole of this vote-catching business has no more than a political interest."

Sir Donald Maclean, M.P., leader of the Independent Liberals in the House of Commons, speaking at Birmingham, said he regretted that the Kaiser should be tried in London. He admitted there was nothing too bad for a man of that kind, a miserable, strutting coward on the world's stage, but he doubted very much whether it was in consonance with the dignity and fine attitude of this country to claim the presence of that contemptible wretch in the principal city of the British Empire. By all means try him, but send him to some little neutral State. Give him a fair trial, but send the creature away.

"Notwithstanding the official announcement that the Kaiser is to be granted a fair trial, I can observe no general disposition to treat his case as sub judice," says "Jade" in the New Statesman. "Looking through one newspaper the other day, I found Mr. Tillet calling for his ex-Majesty's removal from the earth, Sir Gilbert Parker demanding his internment in some distant island, and Lady Byron supplementing a plea for a judicial investigation with the palpably biased remark that should the defendant not be condemned to the gallows or the guillotine, then the foulest deeds must be applauded and floral tributes laid on the shrine of Satan. Even an eminent K.C., writing on the subject under that designation, is betrayed at one point into speaking of the accused person as 'the greatest criminal in history,' and, indeed, it must be difficult for anybody in these islands to think or speak otherwise. Obviously, however, these are scarcely the terms in which a truly judicial impartiality would express itself."

The World's Most Famous Searchlight.

It Sends Forth a Beam as Brilliant as Finest Sunlight.

It is ten feet high, its mirror has a diameter of five feet, and it weighs three tons. Its beam is as brilliant as the sun at eight o'clock in the morning or four in the afternoon, New York latitude, and you can read a newspaper by its light thirty miles away. The heat of its focused beam is so intense that it will set paper afire at a distance of two hundred and fifty feet. It has a candlepower of more than one and a quarter billion.

These are a few astonishing facts about the Sperry searchlight, the invention of Elmer A. Sperry, of Brooklyn, N.Y., who is already known as the inventor of the airplane stabilizer and ship gyroscopic bearing his name and the first electric arc light. When the last big air raid over London was made by Zeppelin, the Sperry searchlights bathed the big dirigibles in beams of light they could not escape. According to some London accounts the Sperry searchlight is the Zeppelin's Nemesis.

One of the most powerful beacons along the coast is the Sandy Hook Lighthouse. But the Sperry searchlight is twenty-two times more brilliant than that light. Were the Sperry lamp substituted for the lighthouse beacon, a ship passing out to sea could be bathed in light until it disappeared below the horizon. By swinging the light back and forth across the sky it has been made visible one hundred and fifty miles away. For Navy use the Sperry lamp illuminates a target ten times more brilliantly than any other projector devised.

Equipped with a carriage that permits the lamp to be turned in a circle and in any direction up to ninety degrees, the giant searchlight is of the greatest value in detecting aircraft. The operator can not control it near
