She could not, however, find any fault with Shirley today for failing in promptness, and they started forth with a memorandum that would have appalled many a less energetic person.

Poor Shirley found, long before the day was half over, that she would have to was half over, that she would have to exercise great patience and forbearance if there was to be a whole week of work like this before her.

Madame was a great bargain-hunter, and wanted the best there was to be had in the market for the least possible from store to store they traveled, So from store to store they traveled, looking over goods of every description, often going back to take the articles they had first examined, and making the weary clerks pull down their nicely folded fabrics the second time.

Besides this, madame did not strive to the second time and

Besides this, madame did not strive to conceal her eccentricities anywhere, and her sharp tongue spared no one.

At first the salesmen were goodnatured, and seemed disposed to regard her indulgently, appearing to be amused by her peculiarities rather than offended by her bluntness, which, to Shirley's sensitive ears and ideas of good breeding, was often very offensive.

But she at last worried almost every-body out, while her gentle attendant often blushed at her rudeness, and longed to apologize for her harsh remarks, ex-periencing also almost a sense of per-sonal guilt, as if she were in some way periencing also almost a sense of per-sonal guilt, as if she were in some way accountable for her behavior. Shirley found herself thoroughly

Madame Marton always retired very early, so, in spite of her trying day, Shirley had the evenings to look forward to, for they always brought Clifton, wiso made the most of this last week of grace. They tried to be brave and cheerful, each for the sake of the other, but it was no light thing to feel that they were about to be separated for an indefinite period.

"I know that you will be true to me," Clifton said with his lips close to Shirley's cheek, when, after their last evening together the moment of parting finally came. "I do not need to ask any pledge from you, neither do I need give you such an assurance; but, my darling, you must write to me very often, for I shall be more lonely than I can express when you are gone."

"Not more so than I, dear, in that the model of the world, while I do not see how I am going to get along without you." "Is there no one else whom you could find to go in my place?" Clifton inquired. "I am sure I do not know who; said his employer, with a slight frown. "No noe knows the ins and outs of my correspondence as you do—you have just got nicely initiated, and have taken hold of period.
"I know that you will be true to me,

"Not more so than I, dear, in that strange place." Shirley answered. "But I shall try to bear it patiently, for I cannot be very unhappy while I know that you love me—while I trust you—"You do trust me implicitly, my darling?" Clifton exclaimed, interrupting her. "You are sure there is not a doubt in your mind regarding my fidelity to you?"

"Not one, Clifton," the fond girl answered. "Are we not one, in heart and soul, and shall I doubt myself?"

"Yes, Clifton," she softly responded, but with downcast eyes and blushing cheeks.
He kissed her fondly on the lips, then said, while he drew a tiny velvet case rom his vest-pocket.

'There is one other little matter which must be settled before you go," and, opening the case, he took from it a ring and slipped it upon the third finger of her left hand. Oh! Clifton, a diamond!" Shirley cried, a flash of pleasure lighting, for an instant, her eyes. Then a look of anxiety overspread her face. "Such a stone must be very expensive," she murmured, in a

Throat Consumption

The Beginning of the Deadly Malady Which Eventually Overcome This Insidious Disease While It Is Amenable to Medical Treatment.

Inflammation of the throat and bronchial tubes, cough, weakness of voice, continual hawking and spitting, pain and difficulty in expectoration, loss of flesh, sleeplessness and general weakness of the system, are indications of throat consumption, which is in most cases the starting point of what leads to consumption of the lungs, and death. It is the old story of catching cold after cold, one upon the other, until the system is weakened and depressed, and the germs of consumption find an easy entrance. General as well as local treatment is absolutely imperative for dis eases of this nature, which attack the constitution, and aim at the vital organs of the body.

To clear the throat, ease and loosen the cough, and make expectoration pasy, Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpertine is of incalculable value. It positively checks disease, and affords relief from the distressing symptoms which fasten themselves on the victim of our national malady.

Then it is that Dr. Chase's Nerve Food should be regularly and persist-ently taken to restore vitality to the system, and prevent emaciation, loss of appetite, fever and the terrible nightappetite, fever and the terrible hight-sweats which sap the life from the weakening body. You can fight off consumption by this combined treat-ment, and thousands of persons today are living witnesses of the wonder efficiency of this treatment.

But the best way by far is to prevent the necessity of a deadly combat with consumption. Call a quick halt to the cough and cold by the prompt use of ough and cold by the prompt use of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine. It is beyond all odds the most thorough and far-reaching remedy ever prescribed for diseases of the throat and lungs.

Also remember as a positive fact that neither consumption, pneumonia nor any other constitutional disease can find its way to a system that is kept in full vigor and vitality by such a pre-paration as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. By enriching the blood and rekindling wasted nerves it sends new life to every part of the body. It is the greatest preventive of disease that man has ever known, and is worthy of a trial. 50 cents a box, all dealers, or Edman-son, Bates & Co.. Torento.

that it gleamed conspicuously on my shirt-front during the last two years," he concluded, smilingly.

"No, indeed," Shirley cried, eagerly; "it will be all the more sacred to me because you have worn it, and it is beautiful,

You have worn it, and it is beautical.

"Well, dear, it proclaims that you are mine, and so I am happy," the fond lover tenderly returned. Then, with a last farewell, they separated.

The next morning Madame Marton and Shirley left for St. Sauveur; and about ten o'clock Hamilton Vining, on entering his office, found a note, addressed in a familiar hand, lying on his desk.

Eagerly opening it he read:
"Dear Vining,—My adorable aunt left New York for St. Sauveur this a.m. The pretty and dangerous sewing-girl accompanied her as companion. We are now ready for the second act in our domestic drama, eh? Yours, WM. NOHWOOD."

A satisfied smile broke over Mr. Vining's face as he finished reading this pithy epistle.

One morning, about a week following the departure of Shirley for Canada. Mr. Norwood was very late in getting to his office.

He looked unusually grave and preoccupied, and responded absently to Clifton's cheerful "Good-morning."

The young man had just received a letter from his betrothed, and was in the best of spirits, for Shirley had written in a bright and cheerful strain, and he believed her to be happy in her new position. Mr. Norwood seated himself at his desk

Mr. Norwood seated himself at his desk and began to open the numerous letters which the morning's mail had brought to him, making notes as he went along on such as demanded special attention. He did not speak once while thus engaged, and Clifton wondered what was passing in his mind, for usually he was very social, and kept up a running fire of comments upon his correspondence.

But, finally, after the last missive had been disposed of, he pushed the pile away from him with a sigh of relief, and leanfrom him with a sigh of relief, and lean-ed back in his chair to rest.

"There was quite a budget this morn-ing," Clifton remarked, as he glanced up ing," Clifton remarked, as he glanced up from his work.

"Yes; it seems as if they get more numerous every day, and some of them amount to but very little," Mr. Norwood gravely replied. Then, after a few moment of thought, he resumed: "Clif, this royalty business is bothering us again, and I don't see that there is any way out of it but for me to make a trip abroad and give the matter my personal attention."

and give the matter my personal attention."

"Is that so?" the young man inquired, in a tone of interest.

"Yes, and I want you to go with me," replied his companion, shooting a quick, searching glance at his young secretary. Clifton looked astonished, and paled slightly at the proposition.

His first thought was of Shirley.

Could he make up his mind to let three thousand miles of ocean divide them? It was a long distance, and it would take more than a week to reach her in the event of anything happening.

"The proposal surprises you," continued Mr. Norwood, his keen eyes still reading that thoughtful face. "I supposed it would, but it will be a good opportunity for you to learn something of the world, while I do not see how I am going to get along without you."

"Is there no one else whom you could find to go in my place?" Clifton inquired.

It would cause endless trouble to break in another fellow, to say nothing of the loss of time. Is the nothing of the loss of time. Is the thought of going abroad disagreeable to you?"

"I cannot say that it is, sir," Clifton returned. "It is quite unexpected, however, and has taken me so by surprise that I hardly know my own mind."
"Well, of course, I am willing you should take time to consider the matter and consult your family, if that is what you want," said Mr. Norwood, with a covert smile, well knowing what Mr. "But really covert smile, well knowing what Mr. Vining's advice would be. "But really, Clifton," he added, instituatingly, "I hope you will go—I have, in fact, set my heart upon taking you with me. Your salary shall be doubled; besides, I will bear all expenses, while I am sure the travel and sight-seeing would broaden and develop you."

Clifton's heart leaped at the words,
"your salary shall be doubled."
That would be a great temptation, for then he would be able to make a home for his darling all the sooner. If his ex-penses were all paid, he would surely be able to save something handsome from the trip, and he began to calculate how Lexington, Ky., Tpril 15.—The directors of the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders' Association met Saturday and outlined a card for the October meeting in Lexington that will see the control of the contr card for the October meeting in Lexington that will aggregate about $125,000. This includes the match races between The Abbott and Boralma for $30,000, and between Cresceus and Charley Herr for $7,000, and the Louisville prize of $10,000, transferred to the association last year, and the stock form purse of $6,000, to be $7,000, and the Louisville prize of $10,000, transferred to the association last year, and the stock farm purse of $6,000, to be trotted under its auspices. Fifteen or sixteen purses for from $1,000 to $3,000 each included in the card will not be anounced until later, to close late in September. The stakes now announced are fixed events from 20 to 30 years old, all of which close June 1. The famous Ashland stake, established in 1885, is renewed this year under a different name and new conditions. It is now called the McDowell stakes, in honor of Major H. C. McDowell, the association's late president. It has been made a sweepstakes for 2:10 trotters, with a forfeit of $300 of four payments each, with the privilege of substituting another horse on Sept. 17 on payment of $300 extra. To all the money paid in the association adds $1,500, and the whole amount will be divided in the usual percentage between the first four horses. Secretary Wilson estimated the probable value of this race at between $5,000 and $6,000. The Transylvania is raised in value to $6,000, and the class changed to 2:12 trotters.

THE AMATEUR CONTESTS.

Toronto, April 15.—There were nearly 3,000 people in the Mutual street rink on Saturday night when the gong sounded for the first bout in the Canadian Amateur Athletic Union championship final bouts. The bantams put up the cleverest and fastest bout of the evening. Hewitt's work and style were the better and cleaner of the two, and he got the decision, which was cheered uproariously. Holland and Nolan came on for the preliminary of the 145-pound bout, which was a slugging match from the start. Nolan was the aggressor, throughout, and got the decision. Harrison was too much for Ainsthorpe in the 115-pound bout, and put his opponent down in the first round. Ainsthorpe came up gamely in the second, but only lasted about a minute. Moyland and Somerville put up a slugging match in the 125-pound class. Moyland was the aggressor, and put Somerville down and almost out in the second round by a left swing on the jaw. Somerville failed to respond for the third round. In the 135-pound bout Austin proved too much for Hern, and put him out with a right on the jaw in the second round. McBrierly, of Montreal, wins the middle-weight championship by default, and defeated Fields, of Toronto, in the heavy-weight class for the championship. Summary:
