Every one was wild to get at the devils, but when we got within ten or fifteen paces of the pits the breeds and Indians jumped out and ran for their lives, many being shot down, for five lay dead where our company crossed. The fighting line was more than a mile long, and though I could not see any other part but ours it is true that the others did their work well too. I tried to watch Jack's company but could not see for sure, although they are said to have had the hardest of the fight at first, but we were still several hundred yards off the fight at first, but we were still several hundred yards off the fight at first, but we were still several hundred yards off nor will be support. I almost think he

Midlander, but was several rods away, so I could not recognize him.

As soon as the rest of our line began to come out of the scrub our gang made a dash for a log stable in front and secured it, then for a large building used as a store. One of our boys was at the door before me, but I was second into the house, although all the rest of our crowd were in right afterwards, and Col. Williams of the Midland battalion was among them. This was the first house antered in Batoche. Here beneath the store we found six prisoners in a dungeon, which was reached by means of a trap door. On that trap door was a pole standing upright and out so as to fit tight from ceiling to floor, besides about fifteen or twenty large stones. We were not long in knocking them down and in lifting that trap, and I tell you it was the happiest moment of my life when we pulled those poor fellows out and were thanked and embraced by them for their liberation. Some of them had not seen daylight for nearly two months, and really the poor fellows looked more like ghosts than living beings. Col. Williams was the first officer to come up to our part of the village. He-then led us from one house to officer to come up to our part of the village. He—then led us from one house to another, but we were not surprised to find them empty.

In the last house we found the body of a size little size of the surprised to find t

So I lifted the peor little thing into the coffin and covered it up and put it away to one side to keep it from heing knocked around. As I was delayed. She had been killed by a shell, and was dressed for burial. So I lifted the peor little thing into the coffin and covered it up and put it away to one side to keep it from being knocked around. As I was doing so Col. Williams rushed over to me, shouting, "Here is one! Here is one! Give me your rifle!" Mine was leaning against the wall where I put it before lifting the little girl. So he grabbed it up and and aimed at a halfbreed's head. The breed was aiming at onr fellows about fifty yards off, but my rifle was sighted for 400, so the colonel missed him. The rifle was again loaded up and the sights let down. The breed rolled down the bank. The ball struck him under the left arm and passed clean through him, coming out under the right arm. I got his gun and powder horn. We are not allowed to keep the gans, but I have taken up new quarters in the Arcade-At the rowrigh horn, all covered with his twill be a miracle if the breeds ever attempt to rebel again.

We spent the next day in taking supplies, etc., from the rebels' houses; and in removing our dead and wounded to the boat which had returned up the river about three hours after the fight was over. Two ether companies of the Midland—the Campbellford andthe Lifford and Millbrook ones—servived the day after the fight was over, so were teo late for glory.

Thursday we marched from Batoche and camped at Lepine's crossing, fifteen miles from the scene of action. The next morning sixty of our mounted men started to look for Riel, Dumont and Lepine. They returned at night with Riel and Lepine.

We are new across the river and to merrow march on Prince Albert, and I hope we will be sent from there home as we (the 90th) have done our share, and we all think have given ourselves a name that will never die. We left Winnipeg in a great hurry, were poorly equipped and did not even get a pair of socks given us. We have all worn out the boots we had at first, and many are now reduced to moccasins. Our clothes are terribly worn and there is no supply on hand. I have an order for a pair of pants for weeks, but cannot get them simply because we have none. We are like the "Jolly Beggar," many a tattered rag hanging over.

Williams then left me in charge of a small party in one of the houses, and I at once began loep-holing it on the sides facing the river and the rebels. But the breeds did not stand any longer. They ran in all directions. However, we went to work at once, and by dark had the place strongly fortified; but no attack was expected, as the victory was so complete that it will be a miracle if the breeds ever attempt to rebel again.

We spent the next day in taking supplies, etc., from the rebels' houses; and in removing our dead and wayneded to the house.

BANKS AND RANK CLERKS.

At last when about 300 or 400 yards from the village we were ordered to halt and cease firing because Riel was sending a man with a flag of truce! He came to say something about the general said if Mr. Riel wanted to talk he must come himself. So again the whole line rushed oheering and firing as pefore. One part of the line soon came out into the open ground and the firing encountered here was terrible. The bullets flew everywhere, for we were not more than fitty yards in front of some houses, while as the rest of our main line on our immediate right and left had not yet come through the brushwood the robels blazed at us from three sides. Being fully 200 yards sheed of our fellows on our right we lay for a few moments puffing and gasping for breath, at the same time picking out as well as we dared the definite location of the enemy in front. While lying here we counted our numbers, and lying side and side were twelve 90th men and one redcoate. He said he was a Midlander, but was several rods away, so I could not recognize him.
