

125th NUMBER

THE JULY CANADIAN MAGAZINE will be the 125th issue of this publication, it having been first published in March, 1893. To celebrate this unique accomplishment in the Canadian literary field, that issue will be a special number. No other Canadian magazine ever attained half the number of readers which this one has secured. Its success is a matter for national self-congratulation.

Special Cover, designed by J. A. Holden, printed in several colours.

Thirty-Six Years of Dominion, by Norman Patterson, will describe the growth of Canada from Confederation on July 1st, 1867, to July 1st, 1903. It will touch briefly on the careers of the greatest statesmen and publicists of the period, and will be illustrated.

A Dominion Exhibition will give a brief history of the Toronto Fair and an outline of its enlargement this year into a Dominion Fair. The first attempt at a national Exhibition is being watched with keen interest. This will be illustrated.

A Disaster in the Rockies will describe the recent misfortune which befell the village of Frank in the Rockies, when a large spur of Turtle Mountain fell over and overwhelmed the town. This will be illustrated with some interesting photographs taken before and after the disaster. The author, D. A. Stewart, lived in Frank from the beginning of the town's existence.

Elevators and Modern Granaries, by Dermot McEvoy, will explain the uses and the characteristics of the peculiar structures in which the wheat of the Northwest is stored. Before grain reaches its destination it may pass through several elevators. This will be fully illustrated.

Three Strong Short Stories, by W. A. Fraser, Duncan Campbell Scott and E. W. Thomson, will, with other short stories, make a strong feature of the fiction part of the July number. The quality of the stories now appearing in THE CANADIAN MAGAZINE has been greatly improved, if the word of the critics and of the reading public is accepted.

The Regular Features will include an instalment of Dr. Hannay's popular history of "The War of 1812," an instalment of Mr. Carman's bright serial, "The Pensionnaires," and the usual interesting departments. Every department will be specially prepared and illustrated for this issue.
