CANADIAN EMBASSIES, HIGH COMMISSIONS AND CONSULATES ABROAD

Canadian missions abroad are responsible for protecting and promoting the interests of Canada and Canadians. Most provide what are known as consular services to Canadian citizens who travel or reside in countries around the world.

At certain locations, where Canada has no established missions, consular assistance may be available from an honorary consul or from the representative of the Australian government.

Honorary consuls are not salaried civil servants. They are not equipped to provide the same range of services as a full diplomatic mission, but they can assist in emergency situations.

In a reciprocal agreement signed in 1986, Canada and Australia agreed to extend consular services to each other's citizens in areas where only one government is represented. In countries where this agreement is in place, Canadians can seek emergency assistance at Australian missions as they would at their own mission.

The following list identifies where you may seek consular assistance in each country. The address and telephone numbers are effective as of September 1991 and may be subject to change.

In the telephone numbers on the following pages, a + sign precedes the country code and parentheses () surround the area code, or the country code where there is no area code.
