

C.N.A.C. members have been asked to contribute to the fund for the new organization. Plans are under way to accommodate 1,400 recruits monthly, double the present average. C.N.A.C. personnel are serving in Britain, the United States and Newfoundland. To qualify for enlistment a candidate must be a British subject, of 3 or higher medical category, five feet or more in height, weigh not less than 105 pounds, have grade eight or equivalent education, be between 18 and 45 and without dependent children under 15 years. There are more than 50 trades. The largest number of C.N.A.C.'s used in any single trade is in the category of clerks, including stenographers, typists, filing and accounting clerks. Approximately 15% are engaged in this type of work in comparison with 25% as a whole. Transport drivers and other tradesmen. Girls who have no training in trades, office work or university laboratories are given the opportunity of taking training courses. Training centres are established in Kingston, Ontario, St. John's, the Bahamas, Quebec, and Newfoundland, Alberta. Promotions are made from the ranks, and all candidates selected for officers are required to take officers' promotional courses at officers' training centres. The Royal Canadian Air Force also is giving officers of the women's division increased responsibility. The appointment of the first woman wing officer in the R.C.A.F. was announced on May 12, 1941. Established in July, 1941, the R.C.A.F. (W.C.) has enlisted more than 12,000 members and hopes to recruit another 25,000. It was the first Canadian women's service organized in this way to release men for active duties and was the first service to send a contingent overseas. To be eligible for enlistment, women must be between 18 and 45, have a medical category of 1, 2, 3 or 4, be five feet or more in height, have a minimum education standard of high school entrance and be able to pass appropriate trade tests. There are about 45 trades. The women's trade announced May 12, is a service period for a year or more in training and service in large cities. A four-week training
