The main characteristic which made Burns and his poems so well beloved was, he thought, summed up in the word "heart." Enough—too much, perhaps—has been said of the poet's failings. They were largely the failings of his age and of his environments. Both in life and literature a man is judged by his best, and shade of the poet's failings of his age and of his environments. Both in life and litterature a man is judged by his best, and not by his worst. The evil died, but the good lived, and that was the permanent harvest of his life. Of all the incidents of Burns' life, the ending of it seemed the most remarkable—he was still a young man, brown haired and bright eyed, when he laid aside his pen for the last time. It was a pitcous thing—and to him (the speaker) an inexplicable one, for Burns was no pathological phenomenon, but a sturdy, strong-spirited man, sprung from a robust stock, to whom 80 years might have seemed a reasonable span of life. But the man had been living all his life on his nerves, he had passed from passion, from thrill to thrill, and life is not to be measured by years, but by sensations and accomplishment. Burns was "burned out," and he died. But, how infinitely sadder would it have been had he been "burned out," and he died. But, how infinitely sadder would it have been had he been "burned out," and he died. But, how infinitely sadder would it have been had he been "burned out," and not died! A correspondent, whose writing, like many a face, tells no tales as to the mystery of its being, asks me what my "personal" idea of a "gentleman" is. Here is a question! To put such a beautifully significant term into words would be to get myself into hot water, indeed. No two people seem to have the same meaning for the much-abused, much-misapplied term "gentleman." Mr. Riddell pointed out that the county had already been put to great expense, and that the Crown would produce other witnesses who would take the place of Mrs. Richardson, but His Lordship, Sir William Meredith, declared that the question of expense to the county could not be considered in such a case, when the charge involved a capital felony. Heated discussion was rife at the mee ing of the College and High School De partment of the Ontario Educational Asso ciation yesterday. Mr. W. J. Robertson St. Catharines introduced the question of "The Bible in the Schools," pointing out the danger of teaching the Bible in High schools. He moved a resolution to that effect, which was after repeated calls of 'question' declared carried. But Prof. Clark raised an objection, and the matter was reopened with much feeling. Mr. Embree at last carried a resolution calling upon the association to assist the clergy in exerting the full power given them by the Speaking about trousers, this seems to be the sticker with men-and mostly young men. "Oh, yes," we have heard them say, "I never had a better fitting coat and vest, but you can't fit me in trousers.' This is before they try them on. This is where prejudice comes in-they have made up their minds that they won't fit or suit before they try. Our query to that is, "What would you do if your tailor sent you home a pair of trousers too long or too short in the legs, or too wide at the knee or bottom?" His answer is that he would have the tailor make them to suit before he would take them.

We do what the tailor would do, if necessary. We have a staff of men tailors on the premises to alter garments and make them fit, Commodious
