DR. RAND PREDICTS VICTORY FOR ALLIES

Harvard Librarian Praises Britain's Work

Somme the Turning Point—Says the English, Rather Than the Germans, Are the Efficient Race—Calls Zeppelin Raids Failures

Dr. Benjamin Rand, an author and philosopher librarian in Harvard University, returned by the Cunard, Andania, last week from England. He carried abroad and left with the Oxford University Press for publication the manuscript of a volume on John Locke, containing more than 200 unpublished letters of the great English philosopher. The Foreign Office, upon his arrival, granted him permission to investigate the work which the nation was doing in its determination to carry the war to a successful issue. A museum of the inventions made since the war began was shown to him. He also observed the treatment of 2,000 interned Germans in a great camp. "The vast munition works of the north were visited, and the foundries in which the ordnance for the army and the fleet was being made were inspected. The yards of one of the greatest shipbuilding concerns of England were seen under way in regard to the future of this great war, which it would not be possible to gain in any other way. It strengthened me in the belief of the determination of the English and conclusive victory. Ample proof was given that the English, rather than the Germans, are the efficient race. The former have raised and equipped an army in two years with a perfection which exceeds what the latter has been able to do in a decade. The entire equipment of transportation from the munition plants to the front has been made with a thoroughness that must challenge the admiration of the most experienced."

"In the magnitude and the multiplicity of the problems which have been solved a task has been performed greater perhaps than has ever before been done in so brief a time. Financial problems have been met by the creation of a character such as has never before been dreamed of. "It is not alone the splendid equipment, the quantity of munitions, the maintenance of ordnance and the strength of the navy to be seen in England which spell victory for the allies. Far more is it in the morale of the British people united for one purpose. It is a nation and not merely a government that is at work. There is a settled and unalterable determination to carry this war to a conclusive issue. "Germany even today little knows the strength of purpose aroused in the English people. There is no outward excitement and no visible anxiety. One might even suppose there was lacking a consciousness of the tremendous issues at stake. Such is the English spirit that Germany will yet awake to discover how folly when she aroused the British into action. "It is a time which demands united action. There is a united and unmaking it. Nowhere is this more apparent than in organized labor. "The attack on the Somme may be regarded as the turning point of the war. The period of preparation will now be succeeded by a concerted offensive. The evidence is unmistakable that the war is entering upon a final and triumphant phase for the allies. The long and glorious resistance of the French at Verdun has been relieved. The Germans can no longer press the Russians in the east or the Austrians seriously threaten the Italians in the south. The big push is on."

Dr. Rand said that one of the striking incidents of the summer in London was the burning of the Zeppelin in the last raid. Its destruction by an aeroplane, he believes, will serve as a stimulus for future attacks by the cheap and lighter craft. The Zeppelin raids in England he regards as a conspicuous failure of a military way. Dr. Rand commented on the strength of the English patrol service.

Discussing the question of retaliation, Dr. Rand said that while occasionally English writers advocated reprisals as the method by which the slaughter of the innocent on land and sea might best be prevented, the most prevalent opinion was against such procedure. In conclusion Dr. Rand said: "One of the notes we frequently heard struck at the meetings held on the second anniversary of the war was to the effect that the individual guilty must not be allowed to escape, and that the

IS IT A MODERN JEKYLL AND HYDE?

Some Say "The Shielding Shadow" is an Imaginary Creation—Wonderful Serial Starts at Unique Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday—Arlington Orchestra

When Robert Louis Stevenson wrote his famous novel and play, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" or when Dumas created the character of "Monte Cristo," neither thought that a scenario writer for moving pictures would yield the pen and place both writers in the background. "The Shielding Shadow," the remarkable serial in fifteen episodes which the Unique Theatre has contracted to present, the first chapter to be shown next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, combines two factors of both Dumas' and Stevenson's above referred to works. Those who have seen advance showings of the first three chapters of "The Shielding Shadow" are impressed with the fact that the author was endeavoring to make Monte Cristo or Jekyll and Hyde live again, but then the next instant such thoughts give way as a new phase of the story presented itself. It is truly a mysterious spectacular production, each and every edition being characterized by something entirely new and different. It contains thrills, which are shown in such a manner that the ordinary pictures of this type are thrown far into the background. "The Shielding Shadow" is undoubtedly one of the best serial photo plays ever produced, and the introductory chapter should by all means be seen at the Unique next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. In addition to this the Arlington Banjo Orchestra will make their first appearance at the Unique on Monday afternoon, and will be heard at every performance thereafter. See the first episode of "The Shielding Shadow."
