WHEN a man reaches the age of responsibility the selection of his life insurance is a matter of concern. The contingencies of life 'zecome more varied. The earning powers may commence to diminish and provision for old age becomes a factor to the thinking

The One hundred Per Cent. Cer-tificate issued by the Independent Order of Foresters is gene in allo its provision against disability, old age and death.

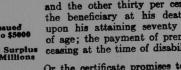

The certificate promises to pay to the member himself, in case of total disability, seventy per cent. of the face value of the certificate, and the other thirty per cent. to the beneficiary at his death, or upon his attaining seventy years of age; the payment of premiums ceasing at the time of disability.

Or the certificate promises to pay aber himself the full face of the certificate upon his reaching seventy years of age.
