

POETRY

ON THE DEATH OF A FRIEND.

He left his home with a cheerful smile
For he went with a Father's blessing, Tho' he mourned for a sister's grief awhile,
And her soft and fond caressing,

But visions of future fortune stilled
The thoughts that were stealing o'er him,
And his heart was light as the breeze which filled
The sails of the bark that bore him.

As the ship sped over the white sea foam,
Like to death-plumes of the single,
How little he dreamed that his last long home
Would be found in that ocean's shingle.

For the night dwes chilled his fragile frame
In the land where his duty led him, Tho' the fever'd flush, as it went and came,
With the phantom of hope still fed
him.

He thought of those loved ones far away,
Who looked for his safe returning;
But the sun had set of his early day Tho' the lamb of life was burning.

But holy visions cross'd his mind
As he lay on his lonely pillow.
And he breathed his last with a soul resigned
At night on a foreign billow.

They laid him to rest 'neath the silver surge,
In his grave-garb closely bound him, Whilst the Osrick screamed his funeral dirge
And the wild winds whistled round
him.

No kindred hand 'midst the stranger band
Was near when his spirit parted,
And affection's tear was far from his bier
In the home of the broken-hearted.

But his worth is known, he needs no stone
Or storied urn to praise him, For he's left a name that's endeared to fame
Till the last loud call shall raise him

LINES.

'Tis true that many we have loved are gone,
Their sorrows over and their wanderings done;
And with them too, are passed those joyous hours,
Of youthful hopes and lov's bright summer flowers.

Those eyes we loved, whose soft and soothing ray,
Clod full our cares and chance our uriefs
away,
Are gone—ah! whither are they flown, Whiles I am left in this cold world alone.

This sad to find that all our early dreams
Of love and happiness were fairy dreams, Shedding their radiance on our youthful hours,
Making us think our path a path of flowers:

Then quickly fading leaves us more forlorn
Proving 'neath every rose lies hid a thorn.

'Tis vain to look for happiness on earth, Man's doom to suffer sorrow from his birth;

This world's a world of trial, care and strife,

To prove our desert for eternal life,
Where we should live—not for the praise of man

But every thought and every action scan, Bend to his will, and humbly "kiss the rod,"

And really worship and adore our God.

EARLY YOUTH AND OLD AGE.—There are in existence two periods when we shrink from any great vicissitude—early youth and old age. In the middle of life, we are indifferent to change; for we have discovered that nothing is, in the end, so good or so bad as it at first appeared. We know, moreover, how to accommodate ourselves to circumstances; and enough of exertion is still left still left in us to cope with the event. But age is heart-weared and tempest torn: it is the crumbling cenotaph of fear and hope!— Wherefore should there be turmoil for the few and evening hours, when all they covet is repose? They see their shadow fall upon the grave—and need but to be at rest beneath! Youth is not less averse from change; but that is from exaggeration of its consequences—for all seems to the young so important, and so fatal.

They are timid, because they know not what they expect. Despite their gaiety of confidence, they yet dread the first plunge into life's unfathomed deep.

Books.—Books of morality are daily written, yet their influence is little felt in the world; so the ground is annually ploughed, and yet multitudes are in want of bread. But, surely, neither the labor of the moralist nor of the husbandman are vain: let them for a while neglect their tasks, and their usefulness will be known; the wickedness that is now frequent would become universal, the bread which is now scarce would wholly fail.—
Adventurer.

"Pray," said Mr. — to the Hon.
—, "will you have the complasance to take my great coat in your carriage to town?" "With pleasure; but how will you get it again?" "O, very easily" replied the modest applicant; "I shall remain in it."
