of the Province of Ontario" for the year 1891. It contains over 200 pages octavo, filled with matters of interest and value to dairymen. Among the subjects discussed at the meetings of these associations was that of testing the milk of the individual cows, and of the combined dairy, in order to ascertain the real value of the milk for butter and cheese. It is a very common custom for the managers of cheese and butter factories to pay each patron the same price per pound for his milk as is paid to all other patrons. While it seems just to pay the same price per pound to all patrons, there is more or less dissatisfaction because some farmers feed their cows so well, in order to get all the milk possible, that their milk is evidently richer, that is, contains more butter in a given quantity than does the milk from the half-starved cows of another patron. Milk contains three constituents—fat, cascine and water. In the right proportion these will make a perfect cheese. Poor milk, from ill-fed cows, has too much water and too little of the other substances. It is found that the fat and caseine are generally proportionate to each other, and the water is the variable constituent. The difference in value between poor and good milk was illustrated by Prof. Robertson by instancing the case of two farmers taking each a fat steer to market. One of the steers was a slab-sided, coarse animal, fairly fattened, and weighed 1,000 pounds. He was four years old, having been stunted when young. Such an animal would be sold at 3 cents per pound, bringing $30. The other steer was a 2-year-old, which had always been well fed, and also weighed 1,000 pounds. This steer would sell at 5 cents per pound quicker than the other would get $10 less than belonged to him, and the other $30 more. Prof. Robertson gave tests of filk each month at a Vermont creamery, which receives the milk from 700 dairies. The milk here is paid for according to the weight of the steers, butter-factory style, one farmer would get $10 less than belonged to him, and own butter would find the tester useful in pointing out the poor and unprofitable cows in the herd. The Babcock tester is sold by dealers in dairy utensils, and those who have tried it find it accurate, and it is not expensive. It does not pay to keep poor cows in a dairy, and judging from the discussions at the Ontario conventions, the Babcock tester affords an easy and cheap method of detecting the useless cows.

Training a Horse.

A horse should never be deceived by words or action. When a rider or driver pulls the reins and says "whoa," he should mean it and stick to it. But to cry "whoa," jerk the reins and lash the horse at the same time is confusing and should mean it and stick to it. But to cry "whoa," jerk the reins and lash the horse at the same time is confusing and means nothing. It is quite common to say "whoa" when it is only intended to go slower, or when the horse has not stirred a foot, to let him know of your presence. One day when your life may depend upon a "whoa" you will find that your horse is not stopped by it because you have entirely played it out of him. Speak always in a natural tone of voice under all circumstances. Always let your horse face the object of his fear, and when frightened remember the slower you move your horse the more power you have over him. There are times when letting a horse trot is almost as bad as letting him run away. Fear is something a horseman should never exhibit in his countenance or voice, as the horse is a close observer and soon learns to take advantage of such indication to become careless of control, if not indeed aggressive. Let your lessons be thorough, but not very long. Be gentle and patient with the colt, but make the willful, stubborn horse feel the full extent of your power until he submits.—Kansas Farmer.

Importance of Bees.

Of the importance of bees in fruit culture, a leading scientist says: "One aspect of bee-keeping in which the farmer and fruit-grower may well take a deep interest is the necessity of bees in the work of fertilization of the flowers of most of our fruits. We positively know to-day that bees not only give us honey, but, in gathering the nectar from the flowers, they perform a most valuable service, without which a full, or even profitable fruitage cannot be expected or hoped for. Thus the importance of bee-keeping becomes greatly augmented. We see that nature is a grand whole, that each part is in some way related to every other part, so that failure in one line often means general failure. We have in agriculture a fine illustration of the truth. Agriculture, the hope of our country, can only attain the highest development through the success of agiculture. As the bees must have the flowers, so the flowers must have the flowers, so the flowers must have the bees. Let us be thankful that the bee has not yet been found destructive.

Growing and Keeping Apples.

Growing and Keeping Apples.

My method of handling apples is as follows: (1) Hand pick in September. I handle them like eggs, and never pack fallen apples, or dent with the finger the apples intended for sale. Then sell them as early as pessible. (2) I never keep my apples in a damp cellar. I find it better to build a cellar purposely for fruit. I keep them airy until freezing weather, in piles, not too deep, eight inches is enough. I never put apples in barrels or boxes before shipping time; they do not succeed as well as if kept open to the air, and they are apt to sweat and draw dampness, then "goodbye Mr. Apple," for it will lose flavor and rot. If properly handled and kept in a suitable place, winter apples should last until the first of June. I consider it careless and shiftless for any man to neglect close attention to his fruit in which there is so much money. (3) The neglect close attention to his fruit in which there is so much money. (3) The orchard should receive special care. I have learned by experience the benefits of pruning. Prune one tree as it should be and leave another unpruned; gather the fruit carefully, and keep them separate, giving the same attention to each, and the result will be that the apples from the well-cared-for tree will last two months longer than that from the unpruned one. It astonishes one to travel through the country and see how whole Bones as Manure.

Some of the richest farms in England are those upon which the liquid manures are saved and applied regularly to the meadows. Cisterns and distributing pipes are the means employed. No other known method of manuring will make so rich a growth of grass.

The Same Old Story.

Some men have pet stories—stories which they repeat and laugh over as if they were fresh and bright, instead of being venerable with antiquity. Mr. Bronson, of the Brooklyn Heights club, is a man of this character.

Mr. Bronson has made a fortune in flour, and nothing delights him so much as to have his friends to dine with him and to chat afterward, unless, indeed, it might be the hearing of himself telling that one pet story.

Descended From Julius Cæsar.

The following has been handed to the Citizen for publication:

"We saw Gen. T. L. Clingman to-day, and he mentioned to us that this was his eightieth birthday. He reminded us that Julius Cæsar was also born on the 27th day of July, and he remarked that there was another connection between himself and the great Roman. The General's grandmother was named Cæsar. She was of German origin, and as Cæsar had several German wives the General claims to be a descendant of Julius Cæsar. The General said that he resembled Moses in one respect only, age, and that Moses began to serve the public when he got to be 80 years old, but he differed from Moses in the fact that more than fifty years ago, when not half so old as Moses, he began to give the greater part of his time to the service of the public."—Asheville Citizen.
