A STORY OF GTEAT SUFFER.

A STORY OF GTEAT SUFFER-ING AT SEA.

(From the New York Tribune March 24)
The ship Centurion, Capt. Caulkins, arrived at this port yesterday from Glasgow, after a voyage of 79 days having been bafiled throughout the passage by strong westerly gales. Capt. Caulkins reports that on the 9th of January when six days out of port he fell in with the British bark Dromahair, water lodged in lat. 54° 40° lon. 18° She presented a most deplorable appearance, being denuded of ber sails and rigging and drifting about at the mercy of winds and waves. Her lower masts were standing as were her forstopmast, but everything above her main and mazen tops had been carried away. A tattered Union Jack, reversed was flying at the centleman who defined a trab as considered and a trab as considered and a trab as considered a trab as considered and a trab as considered and and a trab as considered a trab as considered and a trab as considered a trab as considered and and and and a trab as considered and and a trab as considered and a trab as considered and a tr and mazen tops had been corried away. A tattered Union Jack, reversed was flying at the foretopmast head. Obedient to the signal of distress, which no true sailor ever disregards, Copt. Caulkins bore down for the wreck, and rounded to under her lee.

The Dromahair was so full of water that the sea was even with her deck, and every wave washed fore and aft. Although a gale was blowing at the the time, and it was ex-

The rescuers found much difficulty in boarding her; but success crowned their efforts. Upon gaining her dick the gallant fellow witnessed a scene of wretchedoes and suffering rarely equalled in the annals of marine disasters. Seven poor emaciated menwere found alive but so exhausted that on y the captain and his mate were capable of any exertion; the remainder lay upon the deck in exertion; the remainder lay upon the deck in the similar contrivances by which the similar contrivances by w Besides the living, there were three dead bodies on board. But ere the success for which cheering sight, But ere the succor for which they had hoped and prayed so long and endured so much, could reach them another hand was stretched forth and they were delivered indeed. The other body lay in the cabin. It was that of a boy who had been a washed from the rundhouse on one decadful washed from the rundbouse on one dreadful night down the companion way and drowned. But it was not for the dead that the sailors or the Centurion ventured forth. The living claimed their liveliest sympathy and most as-siduous attention. All the sails were at this time blown from the yards. At the time the wave struck all the men were at the pumps. The jumped for their lives, and after she lifted again they found themselves jammed into corners about the deck. One man was carried high up in the rigging. The wave swept as high as the maintop. The pater ran into the cabin, stove the bulkheads and flowed into the breadroom and destroyed all the bread in it. They had only one barrel of bread left after this calamity, which happened to be stowed away in a spare locker. From this time the weather began to moderate and the men worked at the pumps as long as they could dodging into the cabin to prevent being washed away by heavy seas. James McFARLANE, amail house on deck which had been so well lashed that it had not been washed away. The ship was now completely water-logged and being wholly destitute of sails and steering apparatus, nothing more could be done. A signal of distress was set, and then the men sat down to wait for some passage ship to take them off. They had only some thirty or forty pounds of bread and water. How they must have lived drifting with the sea and and washed by its waves, with but half a bisbiscuit a day for substance may be imagined. Language would fail to paint their sufferings from hunger and thirst. Captain Hutchi-on by cutting a channal around the foremast and inserting a small leather spout managed to catch a little water whenever it rained. This he saved in a two-gallon demijohn and served out to his men, while it lasted, at the rate of half a tea cupful a-day to each. The captain and his mate slept in the foretop to avoid the dreuching seas and thus preserved their vigor longer than the others. But those who remainand they had become too weak to cope with him, so he was soon washed away from his hold and perished.
