

Winning Designs

The first and second prize winners were Brian Jenkins (right) and Darrell Campbell as seen in their studio on campus.

Though the Industrial Design program at the U of A has recently suffered a 20 per cent course cut-back, students in the program did extremely well at the second annual National Exhibition Design Scholarship Competition.

Students from the U of A almost swept the contest, winning both first and second national prizes as well as capturing all three western region prizes.

Brian Jenkins was the winner of both the first place national prize and the first place western region prize, while Darrell Campbell took home both the second place national prize and the western region second prize. Claude Lienau won the third prize in the western region.

The competition which is sponsored by the Exhibit and Display Association of Canada is held in Toronto and is open to all third-year interior or industrial design students. More than $3,300 in prizes was given out, almost $2,000 of which was won by U of A students.
