

illimitable. Organized it can control the world; unorganized it must fall a victim to a more efficient nation, and its wealth pass through divers channels to alien lands. A deep and lasting obligation rests upon all the dominions to play well their part in this great plan of national organization, without which we are undone. Inexorable circumstances, patriotism, and common prudence alike compel us to adopt such a policy as will at once develop our resources, increase our production, and ensure our national safety."

Great Britain and Industry

Great Britain realizes that in order to hold her own as a nation and maintain her prosperity, she has not only to do everything possible to get hold of trade again, which she has temporarily lost during the war, but she must also put herself in a position to regain that which other nations, particularly Germany, have taken away from her during recent years, largely on account of governmental direction and help. All sorts of guilds and associations are being formed, acting under the supervision and co-operation of the Government in Great Britain, to secure the fullest measure of trade for British industries. Sir Albert Stanley, M.P., President of the Board of Trade, said recently:

"He could not help thinking, perhaps wrongly, that past Governments of Great Britain really failed to take into account the fundamental fact that this was a commercial era, and that the efficient conduct of the great industries of the country was absolutely vital to its welfare. Unless industries could be carried on with an equal degree of efficiency, unless they could produce their manufactured products at prices that would compare favorably with those of their great foreign competitors, what chance had the country of succeeding in establishing its place with the other nations of the world? He thought that the governments from now on would take an infinitely greater interest in industry, and would make it their business to see that it was carried on efficiently, and that there would be secured to the country the establishment of industrial enterprises which would make it absolutely secure against dependence on any foreign country for any essential commodity."

Canada Being Poisoned

In Canada, however, not only have we received no direct help and lead from the Government in connection with planning for our industries after the war in the nation's interests, but a considerable section of our population is keeping the country in a foment of agitation which would tend to destroy rather than to build up. There is only one way to pay off our accumulated war debts, and that is by producing in field, forest, mine, and factory all that we possibly can, and selling these products at as high a margin over the cost of
