From a statement recently issued by the Church Missionary Society it appears that that Society, besides maintaining missionaries in ten dioceses in Northwest Canada, whence it is now gradually withdrawing, carries on work at over 500 stations in Africa, Palestine, Persia, India, China, and Japan. Its foreign staff consists of 1,384 missionaries. Of these 405 are clergymen and 80 fully-qualified doctors. In the missions there are 8,500 native Christian workers, of whom 391 are clergy. The total number of converts now on the Society's lists exceeds 355,000, and nearly 10,000 adult converts are baptized every year. The Society requires more funds for the maintenance and extension of its work. It has been obliged to cripple much of the existing work by withdrawing grants for buildings and for native agencies, and very many most inviting openings are being neglected.
