Tarzan of The Apes

By EDGAR RICE BURROUGHS

Copyright, 1912, by the Frank A. Munsey Company.

In an instant they were in a hand to hand fight with some fifty black warriors of Mbonga's village. Arrows and bullets flew thick and fast.

Queer African knives and French gun butts mingled for a moment in savage and bloody duels, but soon the natives fled into the jungle, leaving the Frenchmen to count their losses.

There was but one thing to do—make camp where they were until daylight.

This work was not completed until long after dark, the men building a huge fire in the center of the clearing to give them light to work by.

When all was as safe as could be made from the attack of wild beasts and savage men Lieutenant Charpentier placed sentries about the little camp, and the tired and hungry party threw themselves upon the ground to sleep.

The groans of the wounded, mingled with the roaring and growling of the great beasts, kept sleep except in its most fitful form from the tired eyes. It was a sad and hungry party that lay through the long night praying for dawn.

The blacks who had seized D'Arnot had not waited to participate in the fight. They hurried their prisoner along, the sounds of battle growing fainter and fainter as they drew away from the contestants until there suddenly broke upon D'Arnot's vision a good sized clearing, at one end of which stood a thatched and palisaded village.

A cry went up within the palisade. A great throng of women and children rushed out to meet the party.

And then began for the French officer the most terrifying experience which man can encounter upon earth—the reception of a white prisoner into a village of African cannibals.

They fell upon D'Arnot tooth and nail, beating him with sticks and stones and tearing at him with claw-like hands. Every vestige of clothing was torn from him, and the merciless blows fell upon his bare and quivering flesh.

But not once did the Frenchman cry out in pain. A silent prayer rose that he be quickly delivered from his torture.

The death he prayed for was not to be so easily had. Soon the warriors beat the women away from their prisoner.

He was to be saved for nobler sport than this, and, the first wave of their passion having subsided, they contented themselves with crying out taunts and insults and spitting upon him.

Presently they gained the center of the village. There D'Arnot was bound securely to the great post from which no live man had ever been released.

A number of the women scattered to the several huts to fetch pots and water, while others built a row of fires on which portions of the feast were to be boiled.

The festivities were delayed, awaiting the return of the warriors who had remained to engage in the skirmish with the white men, so that it was quite late when all were in the village and the dance of death commenced to circle around the doomed officer.

Half fainting from pain and exhaustion, D'Arnot watched what seemed but a vagary of delirium or some horrid nightmare from which he must soon awake. He closed his eyes and held his teeth firm set. He would not cry out.
