Filling and Furnishing it to Please the Daintiest Maiden.

"I know a dear little girl who is sure that her room is everything to be desired," writes Mrs. John B. Sims of "The Sleeping-Room on the Farm," in The Ladies' Home Jour-Farm, nal. "It is 15 feet square and has two wardrobes. There is a north and south window. The walls are covered with paper in a delicate shade of gray, with pink clover blossoms scattered over it; the window curtains are of silkoline in the same shades; a matting in subdued colors covers the floor. The bedroom suit, however, did not please the little miss. It was old enough to be in fashion again, but it was of walnut, heavy and dark. Then her mother where only a dozen or more hens are woman, a pair of brushes and two cans of ready-mixed paint get to-gether, success is sure to follow, and so it proved in this case. That bedroom furniture changed its color as quickly and as effectively is the world-famed chameleon of our schoolworld-famed chameleon of our school-days. The rule for doing such work always began with 'scrape the world thoroughly with glass and then sandpaper it,' and it always discouraged me. In this case, however, this rule was found quite easy to be and it was broken quickly break, and it was broken quickly The solid wood was painted a very pale gray, almost silver white; the scroll work was picked out in old rose. A cane bottomed chair was painted to match; a camp chair was covered with cretonne which har-monized. The washstand was fitted out in white. How a Filipine Dies.

The general, in a white hat, was marching in advance of the firing line, when the discharge of a rifle was heard in the yard of a house next to the road. Several soldiers to prevent two more shots, young Filipino was about 30 yards off. He was turning this way and that like an animal at bay, thoroughly frightened. He had a rifle in diers were breaking down the high hedge to get in. Suddenly the Filipino made a run for life. He got through the hedge in some way, and dashed across the open field. Three shots followed, all of which took effect. The wounded man turned, ran sideways a few paces, lay down on the ground and a second later dead. I got a good sight of the whole incident, and so naturally did the Filipino stretch himself along the ground and rest his head upon his arm that I thought he was shamming. Am examination a minute lat-er proved that he was deat. There is the difference between the manner in which American and Filipino soldiers die-the American falls in a heap and dies hard; the Filipine stretches himself out, and, when dead, is always found in some easy attitude, generally with his head on his arms. They die the way a wild animal dies—in just such a position as one finds a deer or an antelope which one has shot in the woods.

Inspiring and Patriolic Discourse by a Toronto Clergyman.

At St. Andrew's Church, Toronto, Rev. Dr. Armstrong Black, the re-cently-inducted pastor, preached at powerful sermon to the 48th Regi-

Dr. Black spoke from Ephesians, vi., 10 to 20, especially the clause in the 12th verse: "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood." Dr. Black referred to the writer, who was then a poor decrepit harmless-looking man, but who had been a great soldier. They were then in the garb of war in an hour of peace. It was hard to realize that the sound of war was in the air, but they all had great battles to fight in their own natures; battles for which the stake was their eternal happiness.

Referring to the Transvaal trouble, he said the nation of which formed a part might have made mistakes in striking when they should not, and in withholding when she should have struck, but it could truly be said that her flag never fluttered in the war breeze unless liberty was at stake. Britain's rule had ever been a most beneficient one, and no reasonable man could deny that it would be a good time for all if British rule prevailed in the Trans-vaal. No government at the head of which was such a peace-loving Queen would ask what was selfish or unjust of any nation, nor demand what could be attained by peaceful measures. He believed God had seen some great wrong that had to be righted which was worth the price of blood. There was no cure for some national evils other than war, and that was why he prayed for the success of British arms. There would surely come a time when he who had no sword should sell his garment and buy one. At the present time, with all nations armed as they were, and with interests so interwoven who knew how great a fire any spark might kindle? They must have soldiers and patriots at heart; might their efforts be inspired by unselfishness, and in the hour of victory might they be conspicuous in humil-

The Difference in Keeping Large or Emall Flocks of Poultry

There is Always a Good Frefit Derived From a Small Family Flock

There is always a profit derived from a small family flock, because it has two principal advantages compared with the keeping of large numbers. The small flock is a possibility with all, but the management of several hundred fowls is another matter. One advantage of having the small flock is that the item of labor is eliminated, or, rather, it is not estimated in the cost kept they are attended to by any of the members of the family, and but a few minutes are given the fowls; hence the cost of labor cannot be estimated, nor does it interfere in any manner with the occupations of those who take an interest in the flock. But when one ventures into raising chicks by the hundreds and retains a large proportion to attain the adult stage the labor necessary becomes a more important item than the food. The second advantage in favor of the small flock is that the cost of the food is materially reduced by the utilization of the waste material from the table. The birds are scavengers to a certain extent and assist in converting into eggs substances that would be of no use, while the scraps would be insignificant if intended as a portion of the ration for a hundred or more fowls. It is the two advantages mentioned that permit one to make several dollars' profit per hen with a small flock and allows only $1 as profit for each hen in a large flock. Those who have a large number of fowls and who keep strict accounts of all expenses find that the cost of food varies but little from that required for a small flock proportionately, and they estimate their profits by the difference between the cost of food and the recelpts, when, in fact, the value of the labor is greater than the cost of the food in many cases, which puts a different aspect on the enterprise. Of course when the owner performs the labor himself he receives the price of that labor in the receipts, but that does not destroy the fact that the labor must be paid for, as the owner may be compelled to sacrifice a lucrative position in some other business in order to give his flocks his entire attention .-American Gardening.

Mrs. Kaburagi, after singing in her native tongue, gave a very interesting address, after which Mr. Kaburagi dwelt on the theme of missions to the heathen, and made his remarks intensely interesting by the exhibition of several idols, some of them hundreds of hears old, which he worshipped in his early days. Among his curiosities is a very valuable silk embroidered lady's dress, swords, money, pocket stove, etc. A very interesting evening was spent and at the close a collection of $12.50 was taken up and given to the speaker to halp in the mission work.
