PASSION'S LEAVES.

"Why not an old important one?" "Because at this moment there is scarce one available. The Peerage gives valuable information." "And because the fascinating master of Evesleigh happens to please your fancy?" "What is it to you if he does?" she cried with sudden fierceness. "It is a great deal to me. I hate the idea," returned Shirley bitterly. "You don't really mean to say you still care who or what I like?" she exclaimed with a slight, not unfriendly, smile. "That is too foolish. A strict alliance for our mutual benefit is wise and reasonable, but I think we have exhausted sentiment. The fact is you hate Marsden. I can see your enmity curling round the corners of your mouth, and gleaming through the glances you cannot veil. How can I trust you to tell me what goes on, without exaggeration or prejudice? You may have nothing to report. Marsden may ask me to marry him during this visit. I fancy Lady Dorrington expects it. If so, I fear nothing, for I do believe that if I were richer than I am—rich as Croesus—he would not tie himself to me or to any other woman unless she could give him pleasure! It will probably be but a short-lived passion. I suspect he is constant only to inconstancy—still, temporarily, he likes me. Now if, as I have sometimes thought, he is taken with Nora L'Estrange, he will be gadding to and fro, and spending a lot of time at their miserable lodgings. I want you to keep me informed of this. I am not going to let that girl interfere with my plans, cost what it may to cut her out!" She spoke with strong emotion. "I understand," said Shirley, who had listened sulkily to this long speech. "If you have set your mind on Marsden or Evesleigh, everything must give way. It is a poor marriage for you, and there can be only one explanation for it. Still, Marsden cannot be as heavily embarrassed as I was led to believe. Was rather surprised to find he was ready with the money for your new purchase."

"What?" cried Mrs. Ruthven. "You imagine Clifford Marsden would be fainthearted to his trust? What a base suspicion!" "I see nothing to elevate him above it," said Shirley, with a sneer. "However, I will endeavor to carry out your wishes, as I have always done, but not for nothing." Mrs. Ruthven looked at him—a curious, searching look. "You shall have your pay," she said, "in any way you like except one."

"You need not have mentioned the exception, I am well aware of it." There was a pause. Then Mrs. Ruthven said in altered tone: "Lady Dorrington goes down to Chedworth to-day and I follow to-morrow."

"And how long do you remain?" "Ten days, possibly a fortnight. Now my dear Shirley, I am going to be rather busy, and must bid you good-morning."

"I understand," he said, "and obey."

Lady Dorrington had written a few lines to her god-daughter, excusing herself for not having called on or sent for. Time was too short she said. It was of the utmost importance to get poor dear Mrs. Ruthven away to a totally new scene, and among fresh faces.

Mrs. L'Estrange smiled as she read the note. "I fancy Clifford Marsden will be her best comforter," she said.

"Do you know," returned Nora in a wise, reflective tone, "I begin to doubt if Clifford cares as much for her as I thought he did."

"Do you?" said Mrs. L'Estrange. "I never quite shared your opinion on that subject, though I think it likely enough they will marry. Mark Winton was saying yesterday that there was an idea at one time among her late husband's brother officers that Mrs. Ruthven would marry Captain Shirley."

It is curious that he should still be so much with her. When a man is rejected, communications are generally broken off.

"It was mere gossip, probably—the report, I mean. Why should not men and women be dear friends and nothing more?"

"I am sure I do not know; but you don't often see it."

"As education and common sense increase, friendship between men and women will, I suppose, be more frequent."

"Perhaps so," said Mrs. L'Estrange, doubtfully. "Mr. Winton was talking of returning to India yesterday. His leave of absence has not expired yet, but he seems anxious to get back to his work. He says he feels he is wasting his time here, and that, for a man of his disposition, the only charm life possesses is work."

"That is rather a dreary doctrine, is it not?"

"I told him so. He was very nice and pleasant yesterday, but I fancied there was an undertone of depression in all he said."

"Why, Mr. Winton is the last man I should suspect of sentimental melancholy," cried Nora. "Perhaps he has lost some money."

"I don't think you do Mark Winton justice, Nora. I have known him since he was a lad of seventeen, and believe me, he has a good, true heart."

"If you say so, I am quite willing to believe it," she exclaimed suddenly. "Listen to this! The enterprising manager of Drury Lane has in preparation one of the most brilliant pantomimes ever presented to a London audience. The scenic effects will be of an original and extraordinary character, and the ballet one of the most gorgeous ever seen. That is something for me! It will be fun going with her! What rapture she will be in! By the bye, Helen, don't you think we can take in Fraulin Schrader at Christmas time? She is not happy at the school, and as she is going to leave, they will be cross and disagreeable."

"Yes, I have no doubt we can manage it. But, too, might come to us early in December."

And the conversation turned on domestic matters.

Mrs. L'Estrange, who was far from strong, had taken cold, and was easily persuaded to keep indoors. The day being dry and crisp, Nora took their maid, Watson, an elderly, staid personage, who had been in Mrs. L'Estrange's service ever since she was married, to hear her company, and walked across the park to inquire for Mrs. Ruthven and bid her good-bye.

Miss Margaret Brown, 627 Colborne St., London, Ont., says:—"My mother has been afflicted with nervousness and general debility for a long time. She suffered a great deal with insomnia, and found it almost impossible to sleep. 'I went to W. T. Strong's drug store and got a box of Milburn's Heart and Nerve pills, which she took, and derived so much benefit from them that I bought another box for her. They have done her a wonderful lot of good, making her nervous system much stronger, giving her refreshing sleep, and removing many other symptoms which previously distressed her. 'I can truly say that these pills are a great remedy for any one suffering from weak nerves, general debility, sleeplessness or heart trouble.' Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c a box or 3 for $1.25, at all druggists."

CHAPTER X.

MISUNDERSTANDING.

When they reached the hotel, Mrs. Ruthven was out, and Nora prolonged her walk to Harvey & Nichols, where she and her attendant spent a delightful hour, and several pounds.

By the time she reached her temporary home, Nora felt refreshed and invigorated by air and exercise. The shades of evening had begun to gather, and she planned to herself that she would read aloud to Helen after dinner, to atone for her long absence.

The gas had not been lit, and going up stairs in semi-darkness, she ran against some one on the first landing.

"I beg your pardon," said Winton, whose voice she instantly recognized, "it is so dark."

"Yes, the evenings draw in so soon now," she replied, with some confusion.

"I am glad to have an opportunity of wishing you good-bye. I am going out of town to-morrow for a few weeks; by the time I come back I shall have made up my mind whether I shall return to India at once or stay to the full extent of my leave."

"Has the old country so little attraction for you, Mr. Winton, that you are ready to leave it?"

"Plenty of attraction; but I need not trouble you with my reasons. Good-bye for the present. I hope to see you again before long, either here or at Brookdale."

He held her hand for a moment and was gone.

Nora ascended, slowly, thoughtfully to the drawing room, where she found Mrs. L'Estrange leaning back in an easy chair, her handkerchief to her eyes, beside a bright fire.

"Why, Helen!" cried Nora, as she advanced toward her. Mrs. L'Estrange started and uncovered her face; the strong light of the flames showed that she had been and was weeping. "Dear Helen, what is the matter?"

"Do not ask me now. I will tell you all one day, but not now," said Mrs. L'Estrange. Rising, she came quickly toward her step-daughter, pressed her hand for a moment to Nora's cheek, and left the room.

"Good Heavens!" ejaculated Nora to herself, "she has refused him. But why? Overcome with surprise, she sat down, all dressed as she was, to ponder this unexpected outcome of their pleasant intimacy with Winton. He, too, seemed depressed and unlike himself. Why—why had Helen rejected him? especially as she had evidently felt doing so very keenly?"

A grain of sand in the eye can cause excruciating agony. A grain of pepper in place of the sand intensifies the torment. The pain is not confined to the organs affected. The whole body feels the shock of that little irritating particle. It is so when there is any derangement or disorder of the delicate womanly organs. The disorder may seem trivial, but the whole system feels it. The nervous system is deranged. There are fretfulness, irritability, sullessness and depression of spirits. The general health of woman depends on the local health of the organs peculiarly feminine. Remove the drains, ulcerations, bearing down pains and other afflictions of woman and the whole body feels the benefit. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a specific for the diseases that undermine the strength of women. It is free from opium, cocaine and other narcotics, poisons which enter into too many preparations for women's use. It makes weak women strong and sick women well.

Even if a man remembers his wife's tastes after marriage the cheap things she likes seem to be best fixed in his mind.

The Improved U. S. Cream Separator.

It has been proved many times that the U. S. excels all others in this important point, as well as in many others.

To satisfy those who have any doubts on the subject, we give below a few of the reports received of work done by the U. S. at State Experiment Stations and Dairy Schools for the year 1901:

Vermont, Jan.-Feb., 1901, 63, 62, 62, 62. Average of 23 tests. 62
Massachusetts, Jan.-Feb., 1901, 62, 62, 62, 62. Average of 11 tests. 62
New Hampshire, Jan.-Feb., 1901, 62, 62, 62, 62. Average of 11 tests. 62
Kansas, Jan.-Feb., 1901, 62, 62, 62, 62. Average of 8 tests. 62
Wisconsin, January, 1901, 61, 61, 61, 61. Average of 8 tests. 61
St. Hyacinthe, P. Q., Jan.-Feb., 1901, 61, 62, 62, 62. Average of 5 tests. 61
Average of 106 tests of skim milk. 62 of 1 per cent
From which it will be seen that, although the separators are tested severely at these stations, the U. S. did remarkably clean skimming.

What Better Proof of the efficiency of the U. S. Separator can anyone ask?
