TEDDY'S FIRST PAIR OF SHOES.

In a gray stone house in that county famed throughout many states for its golden butter lived, some forty-five years ago, the little Ted of our story. With two elder brothers and younger sisters to be provided for, the pennies in that house were stretched as far as they could be made to go, and all luxuries, and many even of what we would call necessities, were unknown to those children.

Six winters had passed since the earnest-faced little fellow had first opened his eyes upon this world, and so far he had trudged through it barefooted, even in winter. Cool days and nights were at hand, and already the memory of how Jack Frost had nipped his toes all through the long months of the previous winter tormented Teddy by day and he dreamed of it by night; yet the question the child so often asked: 'Can't I have some shoes this winter?' had not been answered in the affirmative.

One day a neighbor, what you and I might call a 'far off' neighbor, for she lived three miles away, came to spend the day visiting Ted's mother, Mrs Reeves. After dinner, as both guest and hostess sat comfortably before the open fire of snapping hickory, the visitor asked:

'Shall you send all your boys to school this winter, Mrs. Reeves?'

'No,' was the reply. 'Richard and Olim will go, but Teddy will have to stay home again this winter. Times are so hard, you know, and money so scarce that his father can't afford to buy him any shoes.'

Poor little Ted! He had been playing with his sisters in one corner of the room, but now came and stood by his mother's side, a very sober-faced little boy.

'Why, sonny,' and the toil-worn hand was pressed caressingly over the boy's head, smoothing the rumpled hair, 'did you want to go to school so badly as all this?'

'No, I don't care anything about school,' was the reply, 'but I do want some shoes. My feet were so cold last winter.'

'Well, never mind! mother's little boy must be a man. One of these days when you are, Teddy, you can buy your own shoes, you know.'

Why can't I now?' asked the boy.

'Because you haven't any money. But cheer up, laddie, better times will come. Next winter you shall have shoes.'

Next winter seemed a long way off to the little boy as he stood idly kicking his bare toes against a round of a chair, and thinking just how red and cold they soon would be.

Presently he heard the neighbor say:

'White walnuts are plenty this year. Mr. Nelson has sold pretty nearly three bushels down at the store.'

'Yes, our trees are full,' Mrs. Reeves responded. Then, with a pitying glance at the still despondent child, she said, with an attempt at pleasantry:

'If the pennies were only as plenty as are the white walnuts, mother's little man could soon pick up a pair of shoes, couldn't he?'

Outside the door Teddy crept quietly, that his little sisters might not see and follow him, and running across the yard, seated himself on a large stone in a sheltered corner, and there he revolved the question of how he could pick up pennies, or shoes, for the little fellow's brain worked slowly over the momentous problem.

At the supper table that night all were surprised to hear him ask:

'Father, if I pick white walnuts enough, can't you sell them and buy me a pair of shoes?'

It seemed a long, long time before the deliberate answer came:

'I don't know but that I might.'

'You pick nuts enough for shoes! I guess so!' shouted his elder brothers in derision.

'Well, sonny, you are pretty small,' said his mother, 'and a big, big bunch of nuts will have to be picked. But you can do it by keeping at work long enough.'

Bright and early next morning, despite a white frost that lay on the ground and made his toes tingle, Teddy was out with a small tin pail and a large wooden bucket. When the tin pail was filled he emptied its contents into the water bucket, and when that was full trudged slowly with it to the house, stopping several times on the way to rest. It seemed sometimes as if he never could gather enough nuts to fill even one bushel basket, and his father said there must be two. But diligently the little fellow worked away, day after day, until finally the requisite quantity had been gathered, and his father started for the store at Greenville, Teddy sitting in state on the high seat by his side, and the bag of precious white walnuts in the back of the waggon.

How long the distance seemed, even to the boy who usually couldn't ride far enough. But finally the store was reached, and Teddy shyly followed his father in.

'No,' the merchant said: 'they had white walnuts enough and more too; they only took the last bushel to oblige Mr. Nelson, and couldn't take any more to oblige anyone.'

'It's too bad, Teddy,' his father said pityingly. But the little six-year-old boy answered not a word, and bitter as was the disappointment, not a tear fell. Finally, after they were again seated in the waggon and the horse's head turned toward home, a small voice piped out:

'Father, isn't there another store? Can't you try again?'

'Maybe I might try down at Centreville next week,' was the reply, after what seemed to Teddy almost a half-hour of silence.

'Next week,' too, seemed long to the little boy in coming; but finally, again father, Teddy and the walnuts all drove away. Again the merchant said: 'No, we have all we want.' But when Mr. Reeves told him how his six-year-old boy, who never had owned any shoes, had himself picked all the nuts, why, the man relented, and Teddy wore home that night his first pair of shoes.

I wonder how many six-year-old boys of to-day could earn a pair of shoes gathering nuts, and working barefooted at that!

Teddy is now a middle-aged man, and the same pleasant and patient persistence that nerved the boy's tiny fingers to the task of gathering nuts has been his crown of blessing thus far through life. No matter how great the hardships to be borne his brave spirit never has faltered, and despite seemingly severest disappointments, he has always 'tried again.' Such boys and such men are blessings to the world and to all who know them.—N. Y. 'Observer.'

what are we paying for liquoras a nation?'

'$900,000,000 annually.'

'Step to the blackboard, my boy. First, take a rule and measure this silver dollar. How thick is it?'

'Nearly an eighth of an inch.'

'Well, sir, how many of them can you pile in an inch?'

'Between eight and nine.'

'Give it the benefit of the doubt and call it nine. How many inches would it require to pile up these $900,000,000?'

'100,000,000 inches.'

'How many feet would that be?'

'8,333,333 feet.'

'How many rods is that?'

'505,050 rods.'

'How many miles is that?'

'1,578 miles.'

'Miles of what?'

'1,578 miles of silver dollars, laid down, packed closely together, our national liquor bill would make.'

Now add the $600,000,000 we are paying for tobacco annually to the liquor miles of silver dollars, which is two-thirds as much, or 1,052, and we have 2,632 miles of silver dollars packed closely together for our nation's one year's grog and tobacco bill. Let these same silver dollars be laid flat, touching edge to edge, and they would make a continuous ring around the earth.

Reader, if you need facts about this question, nail that to a post and read it occasionally. It would take a small army of men, with scoop shovels, to throw away money as fast as we are wasting it for grog and tobacco.—Exchange.

HOW TO TAKE A LUNG BATH.

Did you ever hold a watch and see for how many seconds you could keep a stream of air flowing into your lungs? If not make the test and you will find that no matter how small the stream, you cannot keep it constantly flowing in for more than 15, 20 or possibly 30 seconds, but if you will try two or three times each day you can double the time within two weeks. The boy or girl who will try this and keep it up regularly for a year will not be likely to die of consumption, and should they ever become public speakers or singers they will be very thankful that they commenced when young to take 'lung baths.' Harper's Young People, in speaking about breathing, says: Did you ever think of taking a lung bath?—One's lungs need cleansing as surely as do the hands and face. This is especially true after one has been in a crowded hall or church, breathing in so many impurities. How can one take a lung bath? By simply drawing a deep breath and then expelling the air from your lungs you will feel wonderfully refreshed thereby, and the general health will be improved.

HOW A CHILD SHOULD SIT.

In sitting the child must be provided with a comfortable chair, adapted to his size and height, writes Elizabeth Robinson Scovil in a very valuable article on 'The Physical Culture of Children' in the September Ladies' Home Journal. He should be made to sit well back in it, and not on the edge when he has to occupy it for any length of time. The back should, if possible, give support to the small of the back as well as to the shoulders. In working at a desk it should be of such a height that he can easily see his work when sitting erect by bending his head, instead of inclining the body at the hip joints. The upright position helps to expand the chest and keep the shoulders in their proper place. Its use soon becomes habitual if it is insisted upon.

In walking, the heel should not be brought down too firmly. A part of the weight of the body belongs upon the toes, and when a due portion is thrown there it gives an elasticity to the gait which is lost when it is not properly distributed. Walking with the heels raised from the ground is a good exercise, although a fatiguing one. Hopping on each foot alternately is another. Dancing is a valuable accomplishment for children. The consciousness of being able to dance well gives ease and self possession to many a young man and woman who would otherwise be bashful and awkward. Little people usually delight in the rhythmical motion, and if it is not combined with late hours it does them nothing but good.

THE SIN OF FRETTING.

There is one sin, said Hunt, which it seems to me is everywhere, and by everyone underestimated and quite too much overlooked, in valuation of character—it is the sin of fretting. It is as common as air, as speech—so common that unless it rises above its usual monotone we do not even observe it. Watch any ordinary coming together of people and see how many minutes it will be before somebody frets, that is, makes more or less complaining statement of something or other, which most probably nobody can help. Why say anything about it? It is cold, it is hot, it is wet, it is dry, somebody has broken an appointment, ill-cooked a meal; stupidity or bad faith has resulted in discomfort. There are plenty of things to fret about. It is simply astonishing how much annoyance and discomfort may be found in the course of every day's living, even at the simplest, if one only keeps a sharp eye on that side of things. Even Holy Writ says we are born to trouble as sparks fly upward. But even to the sparks flying upward, in the blackest of smoke, there is a blue gray above, and the less time they waste on the road the sooner they will reach it. Fretting is all time wasted on the road.—Worthington's Illustrated Magazine.

KEEP THE SHOES DRY.

Keeping the feet dry is of quite as much importance in summer as in winter, though many people do not seem to realize this.

In the heavy dews of morning and evening the shoes get damp and suffer seriously, even though the health may not. It is worth while to keep a strict lookout as to the coverings of little feet. When they come off at night it is well to have an old stocking full of dry oats or beans. Put these into the shoes, tie a string around the stocking just at the ankle, and set the shoes away for the night. The grain will not only draw out all the moisture from the leather, but will keep the shoes in shape without allowing them to shrink.

Rubber boots for men and boys may be filled with beans or oats and dried out when all other means have failed. There is nothing more uncomfortable than to put on damp and soggy shoe leather, and with forethought and precaution it is entirely unnecessary.—Ledger.

WHY THEY FADE.

Colored clothing fades because it is put into hot water. Even the brown hosiery will keep the bright russet tint if washed in cold water. Nothing else is good for lisle thread, silk or silk and thread underwear. Printed lawns, cotton and linens are in danger the moment hot water touches them. Woolens, on the other hand should never be put in cold water. Only white goods should be boiled.

HOW TO PEEL A TOMATO.

Nearly all cook books say: 'Pour boiling water over ripe tomatoes, then skin them, and at least ninety in every hundred persons attempt to skin them in this manner, and, consequently, do it very imperfectly. This is the proper way to peel tomatoes: Cover them with boiling water half a minute then lay them in cold water until perfectly cold and the skin can be peeled off without difficulty, leaving the tomatoes unbroken and as firm as they were before being scalded
