Our inferences are not drawn from any such premise, nor is it true that the agreement merely gives permission to Canada to fly the Dominion flag in North Atlantic waters.

A reference to the agreement will show that the naval ships of Canada can fly the Dominion flag whether they are within their own naval stations of the Atlantic or the Pacific, in British waters elsewhere, at any foreign port, or in any part of the world. The right to fly the flag attaches to the ship, not to the waters in which the ship may be. Clause 3 in part runs: "The ships of each Dominion naval force will hoist . . . . at the jack staff the distinctive flag of the Dominion." In reference to our inferences, we
