A Master of Retreats.

It looks as if the great Russian re treat which has been going on for some weeks is complete. The news is that the Grand Duke has linked up his armies from the San to Bukowina in a solid front. The Grand Duke seems to be a master of retreats, and it should be remembered that a big retreat is the fire which puts to the test the ability of a commander-inthef, and it is also the great test of the morale of the soldiers of the line. The British Army has always prided it elf on its success in effecting an orderly retreat, and the retreat from ability of Sir John French and those under his command. The despatch says not one London military observer in ten thought what the Grand Duke les done possible of accomplishment. This is indeed high praise and shows that this Galician retreat rivals the successful retreat to the Marne, by which Generals French and Joffre saved the forces of the Allies last gust and made possible the fight-g which has taken place since that ine. But it is of a piece with the etics pursued by the Grand Duke nce the war began. He carried out he same tactics several times in East ussia, several times in Poland in be repeated drives on Warsaw, and it h s been repeated several times in Cilicia. Circumstances have shown such tactics necessary in view of the prepared state of Germany for the war and her well developed lines of com-munication. It means the gradual grinding down of the Teutonic armies and the putting up of the great reserves of the Allies against this German state of readiness.

to give its main features. Sir Edward said they had assembled in the College Hall this morning for a two-fold purpose, first to do honor to their new Archbishop, to welcome His Excellency the Apostolic Delegate, the visiting prelates and clergy to the College Board and to celebrate the anniversary of the St. Bon's Association. The celebration this year had been fixed apart from the regular day in order to make it a function in the general programme of rejoicing in connection with the consecration of His Grace. The beautiful church service which they had Just participated in would for ever find a place in the most prized annais of the College, golden beads in the rosary of the College's most prized memories. On behalf of the Alumni of St. Bonaventure's, he extended a right hearty whole-souled welcome to all present. Sir Edward said the hearts of the Alumni of old and new St. Bonsaventure's—a widely scattered family in every land separated by mountain and seas—lovingly and fondly look from every point of the compass this morning with one common impulses, towards their Alma Mater longing to meet here once more under her roof. Ours is indeed a great privilege, a great honor in being able to take part in this chorus of joy and jubilistion, and welcome. For this is indeed a red letter day in our College, a milestone in its career and a great history of Newfoundland, for such we may term it as the splendid feding

I also desire to extend a very special and whole-souled hearty Newfoundland welcome to His Excellency the Apostolic Delegate, the Canadian Prelates, our own Bishops and the visiting Clergy in our special vote of thanks to His Excellency for coming here just now at great personal inconvenience. It is not his first visit here and many of us who have had an opportunity of coming in touch with his work in Canada and Newfoundland since he has presided over the Office of Delegate to Canada and Newfoundland, can form some idea of the great value he has been in smoothing out the thousand and one difficulties and differences which must forever arise in the administration of most communities of men and women which comprise the congregations that form the millions over which he presides, we desire to convey to him our highest assurance of appreciation of the work he is doing and trust he may be spared to assist in the great work of pulling down those barriers which keep men apart and prevent them from entering into the happiness of true Christian brotherhood.

But churches in Canada are laying the same foundation of a god-fearing community, which in one day may be counted by tens of millions; and in that work no better representative could be found than the prelates and priests whom we'have the honor of antertaining this morning. They come here for the first time, and although conly here a few days they have already made many friends, and we genuinely express the hope that in the very near future they will come back again and spend a holiday with us, nen the absence of official work will enable them to see something of our country and its people, its scenery and those other charms which visitors tell us rank it with the beauty spots in their own great Dominion. I can assure them that their visit will create us rank it with the beauty spots in their own great Dominion.
