Buildings in London Need Constant Care.

A wood-boring grub is causing to destroy many of the architectural wonders of London. The grub first made its appearance in large numbers some ten years ago, and had done much damage to wood sections of historic buildings before its presence was discovered. The insects had eaten into the supports of old Westminster Abbey, which dates from the time of William Rufus, and royal architects and engineers were at once set to work to remove the decayed parts and substitute iron work. The work was extremely tedious, and though it was carried on throughout the war, it has just been completed. It was necessary to remove the beams and many of the supports of the famous building. The work was next found to have made considerable progress in Westminster Abbey, but this structure is now successfully repaired. The work has also been at work in the House of Parliament, the Guildhall, St. Paul's Cathedral, which also requires repairs.

Little Raisers Report Heavy Loss.
Russia—Efforts are being made to revive the Western Asia trade of the days before the war. There were the cattle kings and the nomadic tribes who possessed as high as 30,000 head of cows, steers, horses and sheep. The entire country was given over to raising and the production of wool. But to-day these herds have been reduced that the owner who once owned a hundred head considers it fortunate to have a few. The old tanneries, used to turn out thousands of hides annually, but this industry is at a standstill because of the lack of hides. As a result there is unemployment in the district. There is not enough grain on hand to feed the people half through the year. A good dinner deserves a good appetite, a bad dinner needs a good dinner.

Seweden Preparing Interesting Legislation

STOCKHOLM.—The Swedish Riksdag in 1923 will deal with a number of new bills of national importance, according to a public announcement by a member of the present cabinet, K. J. Schlyter, minister without portfolio. Among the significant proposals to be submitted is a bill calling for extensive agrarian grants and reforms. This bill deals with ways and means of apportioning arable crown lands as homesteads to individuals, with safeguarded property rights, for an unlimited period of time. It provides also for more extensive colonization of public domains by small farmers, and for the expropriation of privately owned land, especially parts of the holdings of large companies and mismanaged agricultural estates. Among the other issues to be considered next year is the eight-hour law, which will be disposed of in one of three ways either abolished, continued as a provisional measure, or enacted into a statutory law; a bill proposing that the police force in the cities and the provinces be reorganized; a new forestry conservation law designed to give the small timber owner greater privileges of cutting for personal use as well as for the market, and a new bill providing for the important reforms in the rent regulation law, aimed especially at abolishing rent profiteering. Laws giving women greater opportunities

"Pidgin" English?

This is the name given to the jargon used in the Far East as a means of communication between English readers and their Chinese servants. It is mainly founded on English, but pronounced in the Chinese way, with a few words taken from the Portuguese and Dutch, who were the first Europeans to trade there.

"Foolscap" Paper.

There is a popular story that during the Commonwealth, the Puritan party substituted a fool's or dunce's cap for the royal arms as the watermark for paper, to show their contempt for the monarchy. This tale, however, is not true, as some centuries before the "fool's cap" had been in use as a watermark. In the early days of paper manufacture, different marks were used for different sizes of paper. The jester (or official fool) was a common figure in the Europe of those times, and his head was chosen as one of the marks. In 1798 the fool's head ceased to be used, but foolscap is the name still given to that particular size of paper that used to be marked with a fool's cap.

Game Sanctuary in Africa.

MAY SHELTER PREHISTORIC ANIMALS.
LONDON.—An untouched Eden in the mouth of a burned-out volcano in the heart of Africa, providing a refuge for thousands of animals, many of them possibly extinct in other parts of the world, is to be explored by scientists. The land forming the mouth of the volcano has been purchased by an Englishman who will organize an expedition to probe the secrets of the crater. The volcano is the giant Ngoro-Ngoro, the largest crater on this planet. The mouth is ten miles across, and a veritable paradise for wild animals. The Germans knew of it before the war, but kept its existence a secret. There is a wide range of possibilities as to what a thorough exploration of the crater may bring forth. Prehistoric animals believed to have perished from the earth thousands of years ago, may inhabit its caves and scientists hope to find live creatures of which only the skeletons have been discovered in other parts of the world. The explorer photographer, T. A. Burns, and Mrs. Frederick Dalziel, both of New York, were members of a party which recently made an expedition of the crater. They estimate that 75,000 animals inhabit this strange land. The crater, in fact, is a city of animals which have lived there for centuries, safe from attack. The steep sides of the volcano make a natural barrier against the outside world and there are few men, white or black, who have dared to penetrate the surrounding forests even to look into this paradise of animals.

France to Teach Farming by Movies.

PARIS.—A project to secure better instruction in farming for the peasants of France by the use of motion pictures has been approved by the cabinet. An annual appropriation of 500,000 francs is available to buy the picture machines for agricultural schools and community centres where the farmers will see the application of scientific methods to their work. The money will be taken from the receipts of the pari-mutuel betting machines operated under Government concession at horse races.

Followers of Zapata Cared For in Mexico.

MEXICO CITY.—The Federal Government has just purchased for 250,000 pesos a tract of land in the state of Morelos that will be given to former followers of Emiliano Zapata, the dead rebel leader of that state, for an agricultural colony. General Pedro Saavedra, one of Zapata's aides, will head the colony in which 150 of former Zapatistas and their families will live.
