AT SPRINGBANK

One of the Most Successful Picnics of the Period.

Result of the Baseball Match, "All-Aboard" Race and Other Interesting Contests.

The first annual picnic of the London Commandery, No. 3, Canadian Order Knights of the Grip, which was held at Springbank on Saturday, was a marked success. Some years have passed since the last outing of the commercial travelers was held at Port Stanley, and the reputation that was then gained was of undoubted assistance in making this occasion a success in point of attendance, but it was those qualities of hustling endeavor, of joviality and good-fellowship that have always been characteristic of the commercial traveler, that made this year's picnic the enjoyable day that it was. All the patience and diplomacy that has been trained in the thousand and one stores of Ontario, all the zest and abandon and effervescent spirits of these roamers after orders, seemed to be brought into play to assure a happy time, both for themselves and those who were their guests. In all that great crowd at the Riverside Park there was not heard one voice dissenting from the general opinion, that in many happy features, the travelers' picnic eclipsed any other that has been held this year. In nat-ural sequence, the members of the various committees, to whose capable hands the management of the picnic had fallen, received many congratulations upon the results of their efforts, and they were told again and again that they had succeeded in winning for their annual outing a warm spot in the hearts of all picnic patrons. While the crowd was being swelled by every car that left the city, there was no discomfort on the grounds. Naturally the greatest numbers were anxious to see the races and contests, and thus there was brought into prominence one of the salient evidences of the night. committee's excellent arrangements. The races were all run off o open space in front of the pavilion, and of such extent is it that the people could entirely surround the contestants

When the contests were over, family groups and parties of young people detached themselves from the main body, and shortly afterwards a stroller along the hill that borders the river could have seen hundreds of such parties dining where the grass and the shade of trees, and the breeze, cooled by the water, made a most excellent place for this purpose.

THE BASEBALL MATCH.

The opening feature of the afternoon sport was a baseball match between the Grips and the Trunks. The superior agility and batting ability of those who carry the grip was made manifest by the score of 9 to 5 in their favor. This result was attained largely by the digital dexterity of Doc Sippi, who pitched for the winning team, and the skill of First Baseman McLennan. The teams were:

All the races on the rather lengthy programme were well contested, and provided plenty of amusement during the afternoon, several unique and interesting contests were introduced, notably the

"ALL ABOARD RACE," where the contestants had to divest themselves, while on the way of coat collar, tie and boots, and return to the starting point with everything on properly again. The mounted wrestling was another source of amusement that has not hitherto been seen at any of

In the evening, the people were entertained in a different way. Many hundreds stayed near the band stand among the trees, where the regular programme of illustrated song singing and acrobatic performances was given. In the pavilion a number of solos were sung by Mr. McDonald, Mr. Blatkie and Mr. Ashplant. Mr. Bluethner was accompanist. The upper part of the pavilion was reserved for those who desired to dance, and many took advantage of the opportunity. It was managed in such a careful way, that was more in the nature of a private hop than anything else. In this way many young couples and older onlookers enjoyed themselves immensely. The music was supplied by the Dayton & McCormick Orchestra. The last waltz was played at 10:30 o'clock. By this time the majority of pleasure-seekers had returned to the

BREAD DYSPEPSIA.

Bread dyspepsia is common. It affects the bowels because white bread is nearly all starch, and starch is digested in the intestines, not in stomach proper. Up under the shell of the wheat berry, Nature has provided a curious deposit which is turned into diastase when it is subjected to the saliva and to the pancreatic juices in the human intestines.

The diastase is absolutely necessary to digest starch and turn it into grape sugar, which is the next form; but that part of the wheat berry makes dark flour, and the modern miller cannot readily sell dark flour, so nature's valuable digestor is thrown out and the human system must handle the starch as best it can, without the help that Nature intended.

Small wonder that appendicitis, peritonitis, constipation, and all sorts of trouble exist, when we go so contrary to Nature's law. The food experts that perfected Grape-Nuts Food, knowing these facts, made use, in their experiments, of the entire wheat and barley, including all the parts, and subjected them to moisture and long continued warmth, which allows time and the proper conditions for developing the diastase, outside of the human body. In this way the starchy part is transformed into grape sugar in a perfectly natural manner, without the use of chemicals or any outside ingredients. The little sparkling crystals of grape sugar can be seen on the pieces of Grape-Nuts. This food, therefore, is naturally predigested and its use in place of bread will quickly correct the troubles that have been brought about by the too free use of starch in the food, and that is very common in the human race today.

The effect of eating Grape-Nuts ten days or two weeks, and the discontinuance of ordinary white bread, is very marked. The user will gain rapidly in strength and physical and mental

THREE IVY LEAVES

Cause the Arrest of a Little Six-Year-Old Child in New York-She Plucked Them in a Public Park and a Burly Policeman Took Her to the Lockup.

[New York World.] Three ivy leaves plucked in a public park for a bouquet for dolly brought Dora Callahan, 6 years old, to the bar to answer the charge of theft.

Such a guiltless little sinner as lifted those blue eyes to Magistrate Mott's face in the Yorkville police court would have melted a heart of stone. The blue eyes were swimming in tears, the small bosom heaved convulsively, and the fingers clasped and unclasped in an agony of terror. Policeman Powers had detected the child in Stuyvesant Park in the act of pinning the stolen leaves on her doll's He had straightway arrested frock.

both child and doll. "Don't you know better than to pick flowers in the park?" asked the magis-The baby lips trembled pitifully, two enormous tears raced down the pale cheeks, and for answer Dora hid her face in her mother's gown.

"You are discharged, little one," said the magistrate, tempering mercy with a warning that in future she should not go to the park in the evening save in the care of some older person.

The offense was committed on Friday about 7 p.m. The arrest of the little girl, according to onlookers and her friends, was performed with unnecessary harshness. As a result the sensitive child is threatened with nervous collapse.

It was just before supper time. Dora, with her younger sister, Lizzie, and a band of little playmates, had wheeled her dolly in its tiny carriage to the park for an airing. Dolly was shown the flowers. "Ah! she wants one!" cried Dora, gazing at her "child" with motherly The Callahans had lived at No. 404

East Sixteenth street barely a month, and Dora knew nothing of park laws to guard the flowers from small depredators. Dolly coveted flowers. It was "mother's" duty to get her one. Without a thought of guile the child plucked the ivy leaves for Dolly's corsage bouquet.

Policeman Powers saw this act of lawlessness, and brought his hand down upon the child's shoulder. That grasp and the rough voice demanding to know how she dared steal flowers threw the frightened child into a paroxysm of weeping. Tearing the flowers from the doil's frock the officer threw Dora's treasure into the doll buggy, and dragging the child by the arm started for the East Twenty-second street station. The little "mother," in all her trouble, would not "child." She wheeled the desert her carriage before her right up to tho sergeant's desk. Sergt. Fagan thought Dora too young to be locked up, but Policeman Powers was bent on making an example of her. She was sent to the Gerry Society's Meanwhile Sister Lizzie, frightened and uncomprehending, had rushed back

"Dora's gone! The policeman took her!" she cried, bursting in as her parents were about to sit down to John Callahan, who is a laborer, started off without hat er coat for the park. The minutes passed and he did not return. Mrs. Callahan, wild with anxiety, went in pursuit. She found her husband, and together they pieced out the story. William Reardon, a saloon-keeper at No. 272 First avenue, gave bail in $400 for the child, and Dora, after an hour or two, was restored to her mother's But such a changed Dora! Her eyes were red and swollen, her brown hair was tumbled, and the little figure was shaken with uncontrollable nervousness. The fright had completely un-strung her.

When a World reporter found her and asked her for her story she burst into sobs and rushed into her mother's

"I can't-I just can't tell it any," was all she could say.
"She has scarcely slept. She will not eat," said Mrs. Callahan, in hot indignation, "and she cries all the time. I cannot quiet her. Of course, I know the children have no right to pick the leaves or flowers, but she did not understand. It seems to me any man with an ounce of heart would be less harsh and brutal with a nervous, sensitive child. Her arm has been very painful from the way the policeman handled her. It will come back to him some day-never fear. If I had left Dora at the society's room over night I think she would have died of fright. The ordeal of the police court was terrible for me. I felt the disgrace myself badly enough." Policeman Powers says so many complaints have been made by residents of the children's thefts that he resolved to make an example of one of the offenders.

Before Squire Lacey, on Saturday afternoon, George Hart, of London township, was charged by Cavanagh, of London, with using profane and abusive language. The case wa dismissed, and Cavanagh was ordered to pay the costs.
