It has been ascertained that the musket, which had been lost for upwards of 70 years, had a pathetic history. A brother of the late Capt. Joseph Hanna and a cousin named James, were sent to carry dinner to a number of men who were working at the rear of the lot through which the creek runs. They were given the musket also to carry. In crossing the creek hath boys fell in and were given the musket also to carry. In crossing the creek both boys fell in and were drowned. Their bodies were afterwards recovered, the lads' arms being locked in embrace. As they were found so they were buried in the Methodist Cemetery, where for many years an old wooden tombstone told the tale of their sad ending. The tombstone is gone, and their resting-place is almost forgotten.

The musket will be prized as a valuable purio.
