HARRY L. BARKIRK GAINS 17 POUNDS

New Brunswick Farmer and Lumberman Has Health Completely Restored by Tanlac.

"I don't believe there is another medicine that could have done what Tanlac did for me," said Harry L. Barkirk, farmer and lumberman of Elgin, Alberta County, N. B.

"After I had the 'flu' winter before last I didn't seem able to get my strength back. My appetite was so poor I ate no breakfast at all and didn't eat much at any meal. I lost weight and strength steadily, and while I tried to work, I would play out in a few hours and have to go home. This kept up so long I grew despondent, and it was certainly welcome news to me when I heard how Tanlac was helping so many people who were troubled like I was.

"I found everything good said about this medicine was true. I had been taking it only a short time when I could see a big change. I was soon eating a hearty breakfast and had a big appetite all the time. By the time I had finished four bottles I had gained seventeen pounds in weight. I even got rid of a nagging cough that had bothered me for a long time.

"I feel fine now, and can do a big day's work every day in the week and still feel fresh and strong. I don't intend to get run-down this winter, so I am buying another bottle of Tanlac as a safe guard. I think this grand medicine should be in every home."

Terrible.
"But, father," said the pretty heiress "if you refuse, Jack will die of a broken heart."
"You are a poor diagnostician, my child," returned her parent. "The trouble he is more likely to die of starvation."

LONDON'S FIRST THEATRE.

It Was Once a Crime to Attend a Play.

"There was a time, shortly after the first theatre was opened in London, when the opposition to the new form of entertainment was so great that an order was passed by Parliament for the compulsory closing of these 'palaces of amusement,' and making it a crime to be present as a spectator at a play.

This was in 1642, when only two theatres were in London. The first of these was built by an actor, James Burbage, at Shoreditch, in 1576, and called 'The Theatre.' A year or so later a second theatre was built at Shoreditch, and these two playhouses entered to London audiences until the suppression of the theatres.

After play were once more permitted several new theatres appeared, including 'The Globe' at Southwark, which was built by James Burbage, 'The Swan' and the 'Blackfriars' and 'Whitefriars' theatres.

Probably the most luxurious of these early theatres was 'The Fortune,' built by Edward Alleyn, an actor, in 1594, and so christened because it cost its owner the then fabulous sum, including the ground it stood on, of £13,120.

The only illumination during the performance was that afforded by candlelight, gas being unknown until 1817, when the first performance by gaslight was given at Drury Lane.

The Japanese Woman.

Mr. Sydney Greenbie has a high opinion of the Japanese woman. The Japanese man, he says in Japan Real and Imaginary, has been made effeminate by the attentions of the woman. He occupies the same place in his society as does our woman in ours.

"Foreigners seldom get a chance to look into the home life of the Japanese simply because in the majority of cases there is no such thing," he writes. "Even were you to speak the language fluently, they are not trained for social lives, and the reason is as much that they are too bashful as that the Japanese is wilfully reserved. I have been in the home of a few well-to-do Japanese, and in each case the woman would be introduced, but would retire soon after. The homes are the quietest. Among the educated and the converted, the woman does come forward a little, but generally finds more pleasure in serving delicacies than entering the conversation. This is due to the absence of natural selection in the matter of mating. Were a man free to choose, he would decide upon a woman who would not only be wife and mother, but also companion. As it is, only rarely are the dull and stupid eliminated. The parents are more concerned about having meek and obedient daughters-in-law whom they can manage than that their sons should have pleasant companions.

A New Duke of Edinburgh.

In due course Prince Henry is to follow in the footsteps of the Duke of York, becoming a duke in his own right. North of the Tweed the hope is being expressed that he will be created Duke of Edinburgh. When the King was at Holyrood recently he was informally approached upon this matter, and promised to give it his best attention.

Before this title could be conferred upon Prince Henry, it is probable that the King would like to confer with the Queen of Rumania and other daughters of the late Duke of Edinburgh in order to learn whether they would have any objections to this title being revived. It is probable that this dukedom will be conferred upon Prince Henry upon his twenty-first birthday at the end of next March.

Ireland and Literature.

"There are people in Dublin who seem to believe that Ireland has produced a greater literature than England and will denounce you as a traitor to your country if you profess that she cannot show poets of the stature of Chaucer, Shakespeare, Milton, Shelley, Keats, Wordsworth, Browning and Tennyson. With the exception of Mr. Yeats," writes Mr. St. John Ervine in the North American Review.

I am the sort of patriot who would like to see his country raise herself to the level of other countries, but I am not the sort of patriot who will pretend that she is on the level of England, France, and Germany when, in fact, she is far below it."

Viscount Elbhank's Heir.
The Hon. Gideon Murray, M.P., who became the heir to his father, Viscount Elbhank, by the late death of his elder brother, the former Liberal Chief Whip, is as widely known in West Indian as in political circles.

For six years Mr. Murray was administrator of the beautiful island of St. Vincent, where the arrowroot comes from. His popularity was shared by Mrs. Murray, who, on their departure for St. Lucia in 1915, received many farewell gifts, including a diamond star, from the women of St. Vincent. Mr. Murray's political courage found expression in a scheme which he propounded for solving the difficult problem of the West Indian federation.

Mistaken Identity.
An elderly and short-sighted lady who was a stranger to London was on a motor-bus from Brixton to the Elephant and Castle. She had worried the passengers on either side of her as to whether she was nearing her destination. Finally, getting really anxious, she reached over and deliberately poked the conductor—who was collecting fares on the top—with her umbrella. "Tell me, my man," she said, "tell me, is this the Elephant?" "No, ma'am, it isn't," sharply replied the man. "It's the conductor."

"You have appendicitis, sir," said the eminent specialist.
"But, doctor," protested the patient. "I'm a poor man."
"Rich or poor, sir, your appendix must come out."
"All right, doctor. Go ahead and operate, but when you get my appendix out if it looks to you like a new motor car I'll tell you in advance that you will be the victim of an optical illusion."
