'Dear father! You've always been good to me, father-Oh! no! I've never been good to any body,' sobbed the weak broken spirited man as he raised himself from the pillow.

The child's voice had a solemn tone, and her eyes turned reverently upward.

I wish he would call me! Oh how I wish he would call me! grouned Morgan, hiding his face in his hands. What shall! wish he would can me? groaned Morgan, hiding his face in his hands. 'What shall I do when you are gone? Oh dear!'

'Father' Mary snab samly again, 'You are not say to go yet. God will let you live here longer, that you may get ready.'

'How can I get ready without you to help me. Mary? My angel child!'

"Havn't I tried to help you father, oh! so many times?' said Mary.

'Yes—yes—you always tried.'
'But it wasn't asy use. You would go out you would go to the tavern. It seemed almost as if you couldn't help it.'

Morgan grouned in spirit.
Fother, I dreamed something about you I slept to day.

WAR DEFARTMENT, Oct 1, 1854.

The Duke of Newcastle has this day reday the Lord Raglan, of which the following is a translation:

When I knew this I felt as strong as when I was well, and I got up and dressed myself, and started out after you. But I hadn't gone far before I met Mr. Slade's great bull dog. Nore; and he growled at me so dreadfully had I was frightened and so dreadfully ber:
