

Mr. Manly reiterated this question in the House on 26 February asking, in addition, why the Government was "rolling out the red carpet for Mr. Buthelezi who is trying to drum financial support for the South African economy".<sup>30</sup>

On 21 March 1985 New Democratic party MP John Rodriguez introduced a private member's motion in the House calling on the Government to "disallow further Canadian investment in South Africa, outlaw the importation of Kruggerand gold coins into Canada and outlaw Canadian bank loans to South Africa."<sup>31</sup> The next day fellow New Democrat Jim Manly noted that South African police had opened fire on a demonstration the day before, killing at least eighteen blacks as a result. "What concrete steps is the Government of Canada prepared to take", asked Mr. Manly, "to put pressure on the Government of South Africa to end this tragic situation, instead of just waiting for a long-term solution?"<sup>32</sup>

This call for action was echoed by Liberal MP Warren Allmand one month later in the House. "Considering the serious escalation in South Africa", asked Mr. Allmand, "is the Government now ready to re-examine its policy, to implement economic sanctions against South Africa, and to implement a mandatory program with respect to Canadians doing business in South Africa?"<sup>33</sup>

Several days later NDP Member Steven Langdon presented statistics on the non-compliance of Canadian firms with the Code of Conduct. He called on the Government to strengthen the Code and to encourage Canadian companies more strongly to comply with its guidelines.<sup>34</sup>
