

Fig. 25 shows one of the open-cut coal-mines in Fushun

Improved hogs.....	261 head
Improved fruit-tree seedlings.....	200,000 saplings
Improved mulberry-tree seedlings.....	1,386,000 saplings

In addition to the above, over 32,000,000 saplings were distributed, free of charge, for afforestation purposes.

To some of these experimental farms, agricultural schools for Chinese students have been attached.

April, 1930.

In short, the results of Japanese researches on agriculture in South Manchuria have been phenomenal, and the money value thereof to the country is incalculable. Concerning the high quality of some of the South Manchuria fruits I can speak from experience, for the apples there were as good as any that I have ever eaten in America, and the persimmons were very large and well flavored.