EVERY CITIZEN TO HAVE CHANCE TO HELP FUND

United Welfare Campaign Will Be Continued To Reach Objective.

TOTAL NOW IS $140,000

Secretary Gordon Philip Complimented For Good Work He Has Done.

The campaign recently conducted by the United Welfare Fund Association of this city, in which a sum of approximately $140,000 was raised for the maintenance of fourteen of the welfare organizations of London has not yet been concluded. A decision was reached at a largely attended meeting of the association in the Tecumseh House last evening, to continue the campaign until it was definitely assured that every citizen had been given an opportunity to support in a tangible way the welfare work being carried on by the institutions which combined their appeal in the campaign.

Those who for any reason, such as absence from the city, etc., were unable to contribute, will be given a further opportunity to subscribe, and a survey will also be made of the list of contributors, many of whom it was felt failed apparently to realize the fourteen appeals were combined in the one campaign. In such cases it is proposed to approach these contributors in a personal way in an effort to have them supplement their gifts in accordance with the necessary scale, and the members of the association are confident that in this way a further sum of about $25,000 will be realized. Some such amount is necessary in addition to the money already raised for the building of the I. O. D. E. Children's Hospital, the Victoria Home for Incubables and the Salvation Army are to be realized this year.

Successful Campaign.

The association comprising representatives of the fourteen organizations benefiting by the campaign was banqueted by President George M. Reid, prior to the meeting, during which he acted as chairman. The consensus of opinion was that the campaign had been successful from the angle that it was but in its infancy at present, and that next year better financial results are predicted.

Mr. Reid, in announcing the total, reviewed some of the reasons why the result fell short of the objective of $180,000.

"The monthly basis is the only one to get the money," he said. "Where some save $25 cash, they could have been induced to give $5 per month. This is not criticism, as it is a new experiment with us. Some men gave a check as they would in one campaign instead of making up their own budget for the fourteen campaigns."

"My original idea is to send a letter

WARMLY COMPLIMENTED

Gordon Philip, secretary of the local Chamber of Commerce, whose work during the recent United Welfare campaign was heartily commended by members of the association at last night's meeting.

Under my name as president, to be followed up by a personal canvass. I am satisfied that the industrial fund was worked right, but the fund had not the sympathy of the working people, who did not consider it as they would a war fund. They did not think it worth while, because our propaganda was not properly started. That is wisdom after the event. The forward movement also affected the result, but we have no objection to that, as it is welfare, but giving a lot to one, causes the other to be neglected."

Expenses Only $3,000.

Continuing, he said: "The building end will suffer, as maintenance comes first. We might prepare a list of those who refused to contribute, and they should be visited by campaigners again. I don't think it is good for these men to escape without being asked. They were never called upon. Our expenses were only $3,000, which would only pay for one campaign."

"Incorporated organizations like these may be supported by taxation. It may not be possible, but is deserving of consideration. By it all would be relieved of any work. We would get all the time and energy of the fellow would get off one-half as light as before. There are more than 100,000 men who could give without feeling it. A man with a $1,000 income, if he were not contributing, and the very men who could give without feeling it. Taxation would pay $5, and larger assessments would call for more. Therefore there would be no hardship in swelling the budget. Eliminating the contingency fund, we are about $25,000 short in the campaign."

Arthur Little spoke against the taxation suggestion, stating that the people who could afford it should pay. "It is no fair to hit the poor man," he said. "We know very well during war years he did very well, and is not earning as much as he used to. He must get back on a better basis first. Five dollars is a considerable amount to a working man keeping himself and family clothed respectively these days."

A. E. Silverwood suggested that $1,000 be set aside for advertising with a two-day follow-up campaign to bring up the total.

"The taxation scheme," he said, "hits the laborer, and is not practical. It should hit those who can afford to give."

P. Yendall claimed that all things considered, the campaign was a success, although the publicity given it was not adequate. He deplored the cleavage between capital and labor, and declared that the working man should be paid a wage whereby he could afford to give.

"It is surprising the way that the industrial workers came through," said Arthur White. "My team canvassed the Grand Trunk transportation department, and obtained $1,000, which is splendid. However, I may say that from 800 employees of one industry we received only $75, possibly due to the fact that they did not start in enough with an educational campaign. With the Grand Trunk employees, a two-week educational campaign was conducted prior to the canvass, with satisfactory results."

Poor Woman Helped.

C. W. McGuire stated that one canvasser visited a home in this city, where a woman was found with several small children, and circumstances did not warrant a subscription from her. However, on a monthly payment basis she pledged $10. Next door, where things looked much more prosperous, a refusal was met, although the housewife admitted to the canvasser that the benevolent woman next door was employed at the prosperous house to wash clothes.

Other speakers included Canon Tuckey, E. Lanco, H. C. Reid and delegates representing women's organizations of the city. All favored prolonging the campaign, but did not wish to break their pledge not to come back twice in one year to the citizens.

Before the close of the meeting, President George M. Reid, W. R. Yendall and several others rose to eulogize the untiring zeal shown by Secretary Gordon Philip in the conduct of the campaign. To him had fallen a heavy share of the responsibility and work of organization, and the speakers felt that it was only just that his efforts should meet with deserved recognition. Following the hearty singing of "He's a Jolly Good Fellow," Mr. Philip's acknowledgment of the many compliments which had been showered upon him.

MYSTERY MEETINGS IN VOGUE IN PUBLIC UTILITIES BUILDING

Despite Officials' Assurances Reporter Has Suspicions

OPEN SESSION HELD

At This P. U. Commissioners Wax Hot Over Dunning Letter.

Mystery meetings were in vogue in the public utilities building on Thursday afternoon. The air was redolent with esoteric flavoring, and punctuated with cryptic parentheticals of fear lest the lone news writer who wandered through the marble halls should evidence a disposition to analyze the atmosphere.

The scribbles' annoyance at the failure of his syndicate mate from the opposition sheet to announce before-hand his intention to pass the meetings up, was also misconstrued into a dire determination to prosecute an old-time reporter for slandering "scops." Nothing was more really suspected than the commission's after-meeting to "discipline" the news writer for his personal as- surance that no city hydro member of the firm's staff was going to be fired for refusing to report the Port Stanley lines last week-end.

The first inkling of genuine interest darkened the reporter's conscience when Inspector C. E. Edwards, hovering to a belated committee meeting of the board of education, which Secretary McElhern had stated was to appoint several new male assistant school principals, announced that he would not give his report on the new schedule to the teachers if there were reporters present. Similar disability on the part of committee members to talk freely, in the face of being reported, suggested the

ELECTRIC WIRING TO

L. & P. S. BUILDINGS

AT PT. STANLEY CUT

Manager Richards Reports

Vandalism Committed Since the Strike.

All the electric wiring leading to the buildings controlled by the London and Port Stanley Railway Commission on the lake beach at Port Stanley have been maliciously cut, according to Manager J. E. Richards of the L. and P. S. R. He stated that this vandalism had been committed since the strike was called.

Workmen were sent to the beach yesterday to prepare the buildings, the bath-houses and other buildings for the opening on May 24. They discovered the wire severed. They had not been cut previous to the strike, Mr. Richards said, because two days before the men walked out the commission had men working on the fixtures, and they were all right at the time.

The wires will be repaired before Monday.

Although the striking employees have had no communication from the commission, they expect that the directors will meet them before Saturday night. They look for an early settlement on Sir Adam's return to the city.

Manager Richards told The Advertiser that the commission, as far as he knew, was not planning to meet the men.

The commission is operating a two-hour passenger service, but is not moving any freight. A number of loaded cars for factories on the company's line were turned back to the C. P. R. by the G. T. R. It is stated, because they could not be handled over the L. and P. S. line at present.

BIRD NOTES

(Contributed by Melvyn Wright, Ornithological Club.)

The most favorable weather in existence for bird migration is warm, damp days, with a little rain at night. These conditions have been nicely filled today, so the list of arrivals is a large one.

May 17 came the Canada Warbler, a denizen of wet swamps, with water holes and upturned tree roots, in which they build their nests.

May 18 the Little Hummingbird arrived, after his absence from home of seven and a half months.

A good part of the year many birds spend in traveling.

May 20 also brought the Olive-sided Flycatcher, Indigo Bunting, Red-eyed Vireo and Mourning Warbler.

The Vireo is exceptionally late, usually arriving by May 10 or thereabouts, and is sometimes reported even earlier, but such reports are probably from song heard, and there are quite a number of observers who have real difficulty in distinguishing the song of the bird from that of the much earlier Blue-headed Vireo, which it much resembles.

The Olive-side is generally our latest Flycatcher to arrive, and is always a puzzle. It seems to be never common in migration, though one always finds it in considerable numbers in the spring country of the north, so that the acreage of numbers must be quite imposing. Yet, neither here, nor at Point Pelee, nor at any other place of which the writer knows, is this bird seen in even moderate numbers during travel.

The Olive-side, Indigo and Black-throated Green are the latest migrants to mark the latest migrants of their families, and birds still unrecorded for the spring must arrive within a week, if they have been missed.
