M'GRAW DEPENDS ON PITCHERS TO DOWN MACK'S ATHLETICS

Giants' Leader Thinks His Box Men Have Edge on the Philadelphia Outfit—The Batting Strength.

By W. J. MacBeth. NEW YORK, Sept. 20.—The Giants and Athletics this year should furnish one of the most thrilling struggles of world's series history. Such a classic is good or bad according to whether the contestants are evenly matched. Not only are the Polo grounders and the Shibe Park lads of about kindred playing strength, but both have been so erratic the latter part of the season that almost anything may be expected in the great clash. There never was such a world's series as that between the Red Sox and Giants last fall, at least from the standpoint of the spectacular. There were a few pitching duels, but the great majority of the contests were slugging jubilees in which one side or the other was put to utter rout. As a rule there were no half measures. Either a team was very good, or it was very bad. And crowding out with the most execrable "bush" league stuff on every hand came a series of plays of such exceptional brilliancy as fairly knocked the spectators off their chairs. This series went eight full games, including one extra inning tie, which is the very best of the balance of the rivals. Boston outplayed New York in the first half and outlived it in the second. But, for an error in one of the early games Boston would probably have won in four straight games. Finally, when the gamest sort of a fight put New York on even terms with the Red Sox, and in a position to win with the deciding game an error here the title New York had the game barged before Snodgrass' muff, put the Hub in a winning mood. Fred Merkle completed the job by his failure to go after a little pop foul from Speaker's bat. Now, during the series both Snodgrass and Merkle showed several wonderful plays that helped to save games at critical stages, but all this was forgotten when their faults lost the championship. Luck played a very important part in the world's series of 1912. Matthewson, the very best pitcher on either team so far as real work is concerned, didn't win a game while Marquard breezed thru two easy victories. The Giants couldn't get a run for "Big Six" while they simply slaughtered the Sox every time the "Rube" took a hand. The most wonderful catch ever shown on a ball field was produced by Harry Hooper at the psychological moment. It cut a homer off Larry Doyle and saved a championship to boot. Hooper might never be able to make such another catch that was the ill fortune of the Giants. It is the element of uncertainty which lends such a charm to organized baseball, and the uncertain certainly enhanced the last world's series about ten fold. There never was two such uncertain and erratic opponents in the autumn classic as the Gotham and Hub aggregations of the day they lined up for the first skirmish. Had either side played all season after the fashion of the world's series it would not have finished in the first division of its company. Both the Giants and Athletics have been going in rather slipshod fashion for a month. Were they to start the big doings tomorrow it would be a puzzle to dope it. The team with the luck would win. But before the end of another two weeks the prospective rivals are likely to settle down to real business. McGraw and Mack will, doubtless bring their forces to the wire in the very best shape for a bitter fight. With both teams traveling at their best paces the series should be a hummer just as it would be a hummer if both were at their worst. Should either team arrive at its true form while the other maintained the erratic behavior that characterized the stretch run of the penultimate season, the competition in the annual classic would very likely develop into much of a farce.

Think a Wall of the Giants. The Giants have the greatest opportunity imaginable to go round the world this winter as champions of the universe. I do not see how the Athletics can beat McGraw's bunch if it is able to get back to the form it showed the first three months. Without a .300 hitter McGraw went thru a disastrous slump that lasted nearly two months. That speaks volumes for the pitching at his command. Pitching is a great deal of a world's series argument. In this line McGraw lays it all over Connie Mack. The crafty leader of the Athletics has only two very much overworked veterans at his command—southpaw Eddie Plank and Indian Bender. Both have been worked to death. Mack has a bunch of young talent which has been very erratic all season. They may stand up under the strain of a world's series and again they may not.

Through an error the price for Hudson "Six" in this week's advertisement on the motor page is marked at $2250 which should read $2950, duty paid, f.o.b. Detroit. Mr. A. M. Thompson, manager of the Dominion Automobile Co., Ltd., says the local representatives report exceptionally good sales for the Hudson line, the "Six" finding special favor. The models in their showrooms are most handsome, the true streamline body, and high standard of Hudson design and construction truly excel in beauty and finish. RAIN STOPPED CRICKET MATCH.
