AT SEA IN A COFFIN.

Convict's Queer Attempt to Esca Escorted by Sharks He Paddles His Sepulchral Cance.

Sepulchral Cance. One curious details of the life of the such convicts at Cayenne, Guyane, and Safety Islands are given by M. Paul mande in a volume which he has just pub-led in Parks, entitled "Forcats et Pros-"" After describing all the most fam-oriminals at present in the penal col-s," the author deals with maryellous spes and attempts to escape. erbaps the most remarkable of them all hat of the assassin Lupi, who went to sea a coffin. He managed to get some nails, amid cofton, and one dark night he got to the coffin shed. He selected a fine, noth, and seaworthy coffin, fastened the In order to turn it into a deck, leaving a kpit sufficient to enable him to crawl in.

es, off Paramariko, came close to him. e captain noticed an object that looked e a piece of wreekage around which a ck of seaguils were circling and scream-. Naturally that excited his attention. steered the boat in the direction of the ect. As he came close to it his curvosity increased. The thing which it first he is to be a piece of wreekage turned out to be a coffin, and in addition to its noisy winged excort it was accompanied by two younds that travelled on either side of it like mounted escorts at the doors of an official sharks, whose great dorsal fins from time to time seemed to touch the sides of the box. The captain of the Abelle stopped the ves-sel and ordered a boat to be launched and manned. When the boat approached the coffin the borg acontinued to hover about, but the sharks went down. The men in the boat toked in the borg, and what was their as-tonishment to find a man in it half drowned and almost in as fainting condition. They hauled him into the boat and took him on board the vessel, and a few hours later he was in trons in his cell. Unseaworthy boats are sometimes called coffins, but Lupi is perhaps the only man who ever went to sea in a genuine coffin.
