Summer in London. (By Helen Leah Reed, in Boston Transcript.) Oh, the holes of Piccadilly - its rumble and its roar!

Who once has listened, ever can hear its song refrain, With haunting echo drowning or dirge, or flaunting strain, Who hears it, in his vision may see a world-throng pass - And over there the Green Park with laughing and laughing and laughing.

Summer has returned to London. Now the Green Park is gay, and the breaking heart beats true. Blype of trumpet - blood an fire - so her hero marched away. Her hero led and last they parted - now the plying kite is gray.
