It is said that Heinrich the Hea- deman of Paris, had a great horror of being called the bourgeois, preferring the title of "counteur des hautes coutures" or "des aretes criminelles," and he used to relate that Sanzon, having been one day pursued and insulted by the crowd with cries of "bourgeois! le bourgeois!" was so much overcome that he addressed a humble petition to his Majesty praying him to efface the word bourgeois from the language and to suppress it in the laws.

This application was signed—"Your Majesty's most hum- ble, obedient, and ever devoted subject, Sanzon." Louis XVI. consented, and by a royal ordinance, culminated by the Baron de Breteuil, his Majesty's faithful subjects were directed to give to M. de Paris no other title than that of "ex- cepteur des aretes criminelles." Six years after- wards the unfortunate Sovereign found himself on the Place de la Revolution, in the midst of his "ever devoted subject," who "off his head."
