An Outlaw Murderer Captured by the Daughter of His Victim.

oung man, named Deniel Harder, is now nder sentence of death in Germany, narkable. Until a few years since Harder was a respectable village schoolmaster, nd was of an irreproachable character. He accidentally met Baron von Hettstedt, the Major of a battalion of infantry, some time since, and began to converse with him. A dispute arose, and finally the Baron struck Harder in the face. This was too much for the village schoolmaster, and he drew his sword and left the Baron bleeding on the ground. After this, Harder became a desperate charac-ter, being obliged to live the life of a fugi-tive on account of his attack on the Baron tho relentlessly pursued him. A detective nally volunteered to lead a company of endarmes to his place of concealment, gendarmes to his place of concealment, but Harder managed to escape before they arrived, and on the day fer their sortie, the detective was murdered by the outlaw. The detective had four children, the eldest of whom was Sophia J. Arnitz; who at the time of her father's death was eighteen. The cowardly assassination of her father made a deep impression on her, and she swore to herself to bring the murderer to justice. With femining tact and extraordinary powers of dissimulaand extraordinary powers of dissimula-tion, she managed to have an interview with Harder, and made him believe that the renown of his daring and bloody deeds had caused her to fall in love with him. She was handsome, his vanity was excited, and he accepted her declaration excited, and he accepted her declaration of love, and said he would marry her. She told him that she was the daughter of a widow, and that he could meet her the next evening at the Golden Ox Tavern, one mile from Gnesen, where she was about to accept a place as servant girl. He kept his appointment, and was at once arrested by six gendarmes, whom the girl had notified of his coming. Ten days afterward he was placed on trial before the criminal assizes at Gnesen, and convicted of crimes enough to send a dozen men to the scaffold. He was sentenced to be beheaded.

Another reputed scion of nobility has met with a fall in Brooklyn, N. Y. It appears that during the Franco-Prussian war the Countess Antonio Oetel presented herself at the door of a boardinghouse in an obscure quarter of Brooklyn and asked for accommodations, which were, of course, readily granted. The resence of so distinguished a person could not be concealed, and the Countess had around her a small court of the local autocrats. Among them was a Mr. William Schnieder, having a profound reverence for a long pedigree. He listened agog to the noble lady's narration of the history of the house of Oetel. A branch conquered Tartary, and Yeughis Kahn was a scion of the family, and all the Khans of the land were of the same blood. The husband of the Countess oc-cupied a position in the Prussian Army, but had the misfortune to get killed. The sum of 18,000 thalers was voted by the Empire to the bereaved Countess, as a compensation for the loss of her lord. As often happens with persons in exalted positions, the Countess became short of money, and the need was hinted to Schnieder. Touched with her condescen-

No traces of the murderer could be discovered at that time, and it was nearly three months before any clue An intelligent and once respectable was obtained. The authorities finally offered a large reward for information that would lead to the detection of the that would lead to the detection of the murderer, and after a few days a note in a lady's handwriting was received at the police headquarters stating that a person would meet an officer at a public house on the following evening at a certain hour, and disclose the name and whereabouts of the murderer on condition that she should be free from arrest or any close questioning, and that or condition that she should be free from arrest or any close questioning, and that the reward should be placed in her hands. The appointment was kept, and an officer detailed for the purpose met a veiled lady and gave her an order for the amount of the reward which had been offered. The lady then stated that the murderer was Petel, and she produced letters signed by him stating that he was guilty of the the reward which had been offered. The lady then stated that the murderer was Petel, and she produced letters signed by him stating that he was guilty of the deed, and that his object was money with which to support her. The letters showed Petel to be on familiar terms with the lady who had received them, and that if she had not been an accomplice in the crime she had at least shared the spoils. Petel was arrested, and a long trial has resulty ended in his conviction and sentence to suffer death.
