TWO PRETENDERS.
 Irregular Claimants to the Thrones of Sweden and Denmark.
 P-M Mail Gazette.
 Sweden and Denmark, curiously enough, are both at present besieged by pretenders to the throne. One in the Swedish province of East Gothland claims to be the unfortunate Prince Gustaf, elder brother of the reigning king, who in the beginning of this century, while at a field manoeuvre in Skone, suddenly fell from his horse and died.
 It is to this day believed by a large portion of peasants, that Prince Gustaf did not die, but was carried off to Norway because of his intention to marry a girl of humble birth. Having succeeded in escaping, he let his beard grow and went to Italy, where, under the name of Garibaldi, he effected the liberation of that country. He is, however, not dead, but will come and be the king of the Swedes!
 So much for the Swedish pretender.
 The Danish one has just turned up. The Danish paper Politiken says: "There has arrived in Copenhagen from Stettin two men, the father and son, the former sixty, the latter twenty-one years old, with a trunk loaded with papers and documents to prove that they are direct descendants of the House of Oldenburg, and to prove that at the death of Fredrick VII they had possessed these documents they could have proved their exclusive right to the throne. They both bear the original name of the house of Oldenburg, Beck, and wear the day after their arrival to the master of ceremonies to seek an audience with the king. They were directed to seek it through the German ambassador, being German subjects. The embassy, after some parley, did not act, and the pre-tenders tried themselves to obtain an audience to suggest their claims—which are attested by the highest German authorities—may be subjected to a thorough scrutiny. To begin with, they can claim an inheritance of 2,500,000 marks with which to carry on the case.
 Then they applied to the Stettin authorities for a recommendation to the German council of the legation, on the 27th ult. Neither of the two men, says the Politiken, looks as an adventurer.
 The younger is tall and slender, with a aristocratic bearing and youthful and winning manners. His features are in an amazing degree like those of the late Russian Czar, so much so that any one who has seen the Czar's picture is struck with the resemblance. The older of the two gentlemen has passed the greater part of his time in researches among the archives and collections in Copenhagen.
 Whole nights he studied his family history, but he always was stopped at a vanished child. After fifteen years of labor he has to his full satisfaction proved that he is grandson of a son of this vanished child. Besides, he has in his possession a number of other precious things to strengthen his claims. The young Beck bears a strong resemblance to Prince Waldemar, and his acquaintance with the affairs of the house of Oldenburg is said to be most astonishing.

For Selling Bibles.
 Arkansas Traveller.
 A party of ladies were being shown through the Arkansas penitentiary. One of the party, upon noticing a handsome young fellow, thus addressed him:
 "You're a very young man to be in such a place as this."
 "What must your father think?"
 "Think that if I could get out I'd do it."
 "How long are you in for?"
 "Year."
 "What was your crime?"
 "Selling Bibles."
 "What!" the lady exclaimed in astonishment.
 "Yes, selling Bibles."
 "Why, is it a crime to sell Bibles in this state?"
 "It seemed to be, num."
 "Oh, what a heathenish country. I am a correspondent of the Associated Work, and I shall write up your case. Now, taking out a note-book, "please give the particulars."
 "Well, while I was selling Bibles on the street a man came up and arrested me. I was taken before court and sentenced to the penitentiary."
 "You don't tell me so."
 "Yes, num."
 "And all this for selling the precious book. Where did you get the Bibles?"
 "Stole them."
 The note book closed with a snap.
About Cows.
 Estelle Cox.
 "Never under any circumstances do anything to excite a cow while milking her," sagely remarks an agricultural paper. Quite right, quite right—we never do. It never really seemed to be necessary to do anything to excite a cow while we were milking her. When the cow begins to kick with both feet hard enough to knock the hoops off a tin pail and then puts her tail up in the air and goes racing around the end of a ten acre field with a cloud of dust following her we don't see how any sane person could think for a moment of shooting off fireworks or doing anything else to excite her.

Wardrobe of the Baby King of Spain.
 London Daily News.
 A lady correspondent in Madrid writes: "It is not etiquette for a queen of Spain to nurse her own child, and Maria Christina has always been deprived of this pleasure. She wished to nurse her first, little Mercedes, and begged hard to be allowed to do so, but it was not considered to be "the thing," and she had to give her up with a sigh to a mountain "nana" (nurse) so dark that they called her in the palace "La Africana." When Sagasta had presented the baby King to all those who awaited him in a large hall, next to the Queen's chamber, he handed him to the Duchess Medina de las Torres. The Duchess, who is a great favorite of the Queen, carried the babe to its mother, saying, "Kiss your king." Maria Christina gave her only son a long fond kiss, and said, with her eyes full of tears: "If anything com-pensates me for all I have suffered it is the birth of my son." The two little Princesses Mercedes and Teresa, were delighted to have a little brother, and asked their English nurse who had sent him. They were quite satisfied when she said "their papa from heaven had." The little girls wanted the baby and the new "nana" to share their apartments, but this could not be, as the King of Spain must have his separate household, with a host of ayes, nurses, chamberlains, and a magnificent suite of rooms were ready for him close to his royal mother's. The new King is a healthy baby. It is very simple, and showed strength by crying loudly during his presentation, much to Don Mateo Pra-cedios Sagasta's discomfort. The layette of the little King is very simple. He even uses many little things that have belonged to his sisters before him.
 Maria Christina is full of simplicity, and often of an evening of late she has made small garments for her child, so have her sisters-in-law, the Infantes Isabel and Eulalia. The Pope sends a magnificent christening robe to his royal god-child, worked by Italian ladies; but Queen Christina wishes her son to be German clothed in the long lace robe his father, Alfonso XII, wore at his christening twenty nine years ago. She has had this robe all cleaned and arranged on purpose, and the Pope's splendid gift must be worn on another occasion, perhaps on the day he will be first seen by the public, as his mother takes him to the Atocha cathedral after her recovery.

Blaine and Salisbury.
 Boston Globe.
 Mr. Blaine has succeeded in drawing out Lord Salisbury. The fiery marquis was so nettled by Mr. Blaine's description of his Irish policy as "impudent," "insolent" and "brutal," that he could not restrain himself from making a peevy speech in the House of Lords about it. Salisbury and Blaine are two of a kind, and in this little game of international bluff they are playing into each other's hands finely. It will help Salisbury in England to be denounced by Blaine, and it will help Blaine in America to be denounced by Salisbury. If they should live to be prime minister and president, respectively, they ought to be the best of friends. If that day ever comes, Anglo-Americanship will be at a premium on both sides of the Atlantic.
 Meantime it is interesting to note that, though Mr. Blaine has withdrawn the offensive epithets which the stenographer is very certain that he applied to Lord Salisbury in his Portland speech, Earl Kimberley, one of the Liberal leaders in the British House of Lords, told the haughty leader of the Tories to his face that Mr. Blaine's characterization of his attitude towards Ireland was quite just.
 Encouraged by Kimberley's endorsement, Mr. Blaine need not feel obliged to go any further in the retraction and apology line.

What They Lost by Moving.
 Kingston Freeman.
 A little girl, in company with her mother, visited the house of a friend living "on the Hill," Bonadont. The little girl was born and brought up in the house in which she was visiting. Her parents had moved from it about a month ago. The girl took great pleasure in going from one place to another, where she had spent many happy hours playing.
 Just before leaving her mother took her into the lady's bedroom and showed her a wee baby that had arrived a few days before. She looked at it for a moment, and then innocently exclaimed: "Mamma, we moved a little too soon. We'd have got that baby if we had stayed here."
