

Fiendish elevator traps students

Two students were the innocent victims Monday of a faulty elevator in the Henry Marshall Tory building.

Students passing under the archway of the Tory building late Monday afternoon heard muffled shouting, "Help! We're in the elevator. Help!"

Three Samaritan science students, Leslie Dawson, Carolyn Cossey, and Joan Christie, followed the shouts to the elevator opening on the west side of the archway.

They went into the building to find a janitor.

A janitor in the Tory building, when told of the incident, shrugged his shoulders and said, "Well, they aren't supposed to be in there. It's out of order."

(There was no sign of warning near the elevator.)

"They can stay in for a day or so without food," the janitor continued.

"I can't do anything, and the works office is closed now."

With that, he picked up his brooms and retreated to a storage room.

TRY AGAIN

The girls then called campus patrol which said they would notify the elevator company immediately.

While waiting for help, the victims and the would-be rescuers carried on a stimulating conversation by slipping notes under the door of the elevator.

The "outsiders" found out the trapped students were Tom and Pat, and that Tom "kind of liked it in here." Pat didn't.

By this time, a small group of curious students and campus patrolmen had gathered at the door to the elevator.

Someone pushed a box of raisins through the crack in the door just in case the victims were getting hungry.

Finally, a repair man from the elevator company came and removed the door.

Pat put a finishing touch to the whole episode by banging her head on the roof as she was stepping out of the elevator.

"What a stupid place to put an elevator!" she shouted.

Gone the day of the shrinking violet, and a good thing, too. How else could today's young lady wear sports attire of such smartness as that available in this Establishment. And how else could we mere men enjoy so much eye-catching femininity?

OUR MAN ON COUNCIL?—Actually it's Valerie Blakeley, phys ed 3, president of WAA. As of last Monday's council meeting, however, she is also interim vice-president of men's athletics, and is obviously a most able-bodied choice.

Honorary president lauds union projects

The honorary president of the students' union was a guest at Monday night's students' council meeting.

Mr. Louis Derocher, a member of the Board of Governors, commented on the favorable impression which has been made upon the Board of Governors by recent students' union projects. He made special note of the new SUB and Second Century Week in this regard.

In discussion concerning the students' union general meeting of Oct. 12, students' union president Branny Schepanovich said a letter will be sent to Doug Ward, president of CUS, saying the failure of the general meeting to obtain a quorum is regarded as a "reconfirmation of our decision to withdraw from CUS."

The position of Owen Anderson, chairman of CUS, was brought under consideration.

Schepanovich's motion that the position of interim second vice-president be established was defeated after considerable discussion.

Marilyn Pilkington, students' union vice-president, suggested making Anderson interim second vice-president would influence future elections.

HISTORIAN SPEAKS

Prominent lecturer and political historian Prof. Frank H. Underhill speaks Monday Tory LB1 on Nationalism: This is Federalism in Canada and the U.S. in the Last Century.

An additional motion was proposed that the title of CUS chairman be changed to interim External Affairs Chairman.

It was suggested the elimination of CUS chairman would hinder the possible return to CUS in March.

Anderson agreed in essence with the remarks made, saying he does not want to see any by-law changes made.

The matter is to be sent to the By-Law Committee for consideration and an appraisal of alternatives.

A motion to amalgamate the U of A Concert Band and the Golden Bear Band was passed.

The vote was taken after nearly two hours of debate during which council heard arguments from the concert band and from Cecil Pretty, chairman of the Music Board.

Students' council authorized the appointment of John Madell as director of the Jubilaire production Once Upon a Mattress.

The Law School Forum was awarded a grant of $1,050 for its program of guest speakers. Melvin Belli will speak Nov. 4, and Charles Lynch, the second speaker in the series will speak Nov. 30.

The Commerce Undergraduate Society was granted a loan of $2,000 to be repaid from proceeds from this weekend's rodeo.

The resignation of ed rep, Al Lafevere, was accepted, and Dale Enarson was appointed as interim ed rep.
