

GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES

President Roosevelt Appoints Charles J. Bonaparte, of Baltimore, Secretary of the Navy.

Paul Morton has written his resignation as United States Secretary of the Navy, and Charles J. Bonaparte, of Baltimore, Md., will succeed him on July 1.

Mr. Bonaparte never shared any of his brother's ambition for noble rank, and he had little sympathy in the contest. No one doubts that he is prouder as an American citizen, with the rank of Secretary of the Navy, than of all his ancestors' titles combined.

Mr. Bonaparte was born in Baltimore, June 9, 1851. His mother was Miss Susan May Williams, of Roxbury, Mass. He was graduated at Harvard College in 1871 and at Harvard Law School three years later.

Mr. Bonaparte accepted the appointment of Baltimore, Md.—Charles J. Bonaparte was presiding over a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Reform League, of which he is chairman, when the Associated Press despatch announcing his appointment to succeed Paul Morton as Secretary of the Navy was shown him.

It was the prominence he gained as the head of the Baltimore reformers that attracted the attention of President Roosevelt. Mr. Bonaparte has an extensive law practice, and his annual income from this source is large. He owns much real estate and is thought to be worth probably a million dollars.

He is of refined, simple tastes. His city home, at the corner of Park avenue and Centre street, is comfortably but not lavishly or expensively furnished. He possesses many rare relics, the greater part of which are at his country home, Belle Vista, in the Long Green Valley, between Towns and Belair.

He possesses many rare relics, the greater part of which are at his country home, Belle Vista, in the Long Green Valley, between Towns and Belair.

Mr. Bonaparte is an American through and through. He cares little for foreign travel, and the places made famous by the deeds of his ancestors have no charm for him. He is perhaps prouder of his grandmothers than of his more historical ancestors.

Students of heredity have pointed out the importance of the women in the Bonaparte line in determining the character of its men. The father of Napoleon was an indolent, easy-going Corsican gentleman of Tuscan descent, proud of his titles and patents of nobility from the Doges of Genoa and the Tuscan princes, but he in no wise showed any disposition to take steps toward adding luster to the name of Bonaparte.

Mr. Bonaparte may be called an American of Americans, for patriotism has been the subject of his lectures as well as his writings. He has never been known to pride himself upon his family or lineage, and, indeed, has been known to resent inquiries or remarks on this subject in general conversation.

Mr. Bonaparte's father was never naturalized as an American citizen. This act would have interfered with his aspirations to recognition as a member of the French Imperial family.

member of the French Imperial family. He lived the quiet life of a gentleman and cultivated literary pursuits. He had two sons—Jerome Napoleon and Charles Joseph Bonaparte. The elder, Jerome, was born in Baltimore in 1832. He had a decided bent for military life, which pleased his grandmother. He served first in the United States Army, later as a lieutenant in the French army.

ATTACKED THE FAMOUS BALTIMORE RING

Baltimore was at that time ruled by a political ring, of which it has been said that Tweed might study with admiration, while Ames, in Minneapolis, and the "gang" in Missouri before Governor Folk arrived would both hang their heads for envy. So strongly entrenched was the ring that for years opposition to it had been a mere pretense. It was worth a business life to fight. Its leader and lieutenants held the entire State in their grasp, and the idea that there might be a battle seemed well-nigh impossible.

A FEARLESS PROSECUTOR OF CRIMINALS.

Of course the smile had not developed so far at that time, but such as it was it drew about him some few good citizens, who, in the year 1875, willingly went down to defeat with the young man. But the fight was on, and so thoroughly had the public spirit been aroused that the selection of Charles Joseph Bonaparte as special counsel to prosecute the ballot box frauds was demanded and allowed. Before another year he was a personality to be reckoned with, and so he has remained ever since. In the campaigns of 1882, 1883, 1885, 1887, 1889 and 1895 he was practically the controlling force in the election. In 1895 he was appointed Supervisor of Elections by the Governor and held office for just three weeks, until after election, his only salaried appointment.

FEATURES OF HIS ANCESTORS.

It has sometimes been remarked that Mr. Bonaparte does not look unlike his distinguished ancestor. It is said that this irritates him, because he is taller, stronger than "the Little Corporal." His body is thick and sturdy looking, and his hands and feet are almost as small as a woman's. His neck is thick and muscular, and it needs to be, for he has a massive head, nearly bald, and which bulges over the temples. His short mustache is turning gray, and his strongly marked face is fittingly set off by the greater chin and jaw.

Mr. Bonaparte and President Roosevelt met as civil service reformers, and have always been the warmest of friends. Mr. Bonaparte has declared Mr. Roosevelt is an ideal American, and the President's eulogy has been stated in the foregoing. Mr. Bonaparte served for a time as a member of the Indian Commission, and last year he was appointed one of the special counsel for the Government to prosecute the Post Office frauds. The result of that prosecution still has echoes in federal court rooms as various officials come up for sentence or trial.

The woman who shows a gentle courtesy to all humanity—who is considerate and kind, and best of all, charitable—creates an atmosphere of happiness wherever she goes and she attracts to her the best minds and the rarest natures.

Care of the Eyes

Never try to do fine work on dark cloth by the aid of artificial light. Avoid bright light after coming from the dark, or looking steadily at a flame of light. Never read books or papers with small print in a poor light; not at all would be better.

When reading, lean well back, holding up the book and allowing the light to fall on it from the side. Always shield a baby's eyes from the sun or a strong light while sleeping, or the sight may become weak.

For styes on the eyes try bathing them with milk, or applying cold tea leaves, as these often give relief. Even when the eyes are in good condition they are benefited by occasionally bathing them in cold salt water, and when they have been overtaxed this will be found to afford great relief.

Never abuse the eyes. If you feel that they need attention in any way consult the best oculist at once. Many latent troubles are first discovered by a specialist.

Weak eyes are usually a sign of delicacy of constitution, they are common in badly nourished children. Cod liver oil, with quinine bark or iron tonic, and plenty of milk and fresh air are the grand remedies. Overstudy should be avoided, and going out in wet or even damp weather and late in the evening forbidden.

They are a Powerful Nerve—Dyspepsia causes derangement of the nervous system, and nervous debility once engendered is difficult to deal with. There are many testimonials as to the efficacy of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills in treating this disorder, showing that they never fail to produce good results. By giving proper tone to the digestive organs, they restore equilibrium to the nerve centres.

Conversions at Home

The tide of conversion flows pretty steadily in the English-speaking colony at Rome, and at every season of the year converts from the most varied ranks of society are received. Of the most recent are Lady Butt and Miss Margaret Butt, the latter of whom is now Princess Margarita Ruspoli, wife of Don Fabrizio Ruspoli, a scion of the house at the head of the Sacred Hospice. Lady Butt is an American by birth, an Englishwoman by marriage (being the widow of a very well known Judge) and a Roman by long residence, during which her name has been the principal one in the circle of theosophists dwelling in the Eternal City.

Mild in Their Action.—Parmelee's Vegetable Pills are very mild in their action. They do not cause griping in the stomach or cause disturbances there as so many pills do. Therefore, the most delicate can take them without fear of unpleasant results. They can, too, be administered to children without imposing the penalties which follow the use of pills not so carefully prepared.
