How a Hamilton "Spectator" Attache Nabbed a Blyth Dealer in "Queer.

From the London Free Press For some time past it has been known to the Post Office Inspector of this dis-trict that an individual in Blyth was engaged in "crooked work," more especially in the issuance of counterfeit bills, Canadian and American. The number of letters passing through the mails to the address of "W. A. DEAR SIR.—My confidential agent gave me your name, he said you was a man of BUSI-NESS, and in a position to handle our goods in safety. If we have made a mistake do us no harm and let the matter drop. Never try to injure a man who is willing to prove himself your friend. The articles we deal in are ONE's and TWO'S United States Treesury notes, Fives and TENS of the Bank of Montreal and Commerce. They are for every practical purpose as good as the genuine article, and there is not three experts in Canada who can detect them. The business is perfectly safe, but like all other large paying speculations (not exactly legitimate.)

Martin packed a cheap door lock in a tin package and sent it by express to the young fellow C. O. D., $10. The young man took it out, and a door-knob worth possibly 50 cents, just cost him $20.

Sir, --Mr. Murray Anderson writes me to say that the debate we advised you of that was to come off in the city of London, Ont., took place a few days ago. He says we won the debate "by a large majority." The debate, he says, was not public, as our society does not hold public meetings, but was attended by a large number of invited guests. Messrs. Anderson and Hendershott took the $10,000 worth in a day or two, for which the reporter was to whack up $600. "Garland" said he was not afraid of any trouble, because any person wanting to buy was as liable as he was, and he got his letters through a local business man, who forwarded them to him, forty miles away. He then went dewn stairs. The reporter followed in a few minutes and told the constable, who at once arrested Mr. "Garland." whose real name is O. Mr. "Garland." whose real name is O.

to say. The evidence of the reporter, the constable and D. B. McKinnon, postmaster, was taken, and Martin was committed for trial. The postmaster testified that Martin had been in the habit of getting letters addressed to W. A. Garland. Martin does not bear a particularly good reputation locally, and many have thought some time back that he was the "queer" person, for the matter has been an open secret around there for a long time. It is freely stated that others are mixed up with him. Neither counterfeit money nor circulars were found in his premises when the constable made search. He took his examination coolly, and didn't seem the slightest bit worried at the serious charge. He stated in the hotel room that he had been carrying this on for a year and a-half. He said he got American greebacks and photographed the faces of Canadian bills so that the difference was impossible to detect, unless a banker by chance struck two with similar numbers.

It is believed that Martin has no counterface in the limit of people interested in all industrial interests of the United States to be entired in all industrial interests of the United States to be held in Chicago May 21st.
