order of the Invincibles." Curley, after the Phenix park murder, further plotted the murder of Cavanagh, the car driver, as he was a person who knew too much. He was by trade a carpenter, and his habits of in-dustry and solutiety secured him a re-spectable position. At the time of his arrest he was about starting business on his own account. He had a wife and family, and a large circle of friends. During the trial he appeared at the dock in a spotless white shirt front. On his conviction he delivered an oration, which the connels for the other prisoners has since confessed left no doubt as to the truth of the informer's story, and ensured did not fear death, and declared that the British Government was his avowed enemy, admitting further that he was a Fenian, and would die with the Fenian oath, which he had taken, anbroken. order of the Invincibles."
