A King's Gentleman.

And, gliding to his side, she laid her hand upon his folded arms and looked up in his face, her eyes humid, her lips parted, the subtle fragrance of her hair and dress floating around her in an atmosphere of intoxicating languor. He did not move hand nor foot; nor, though his face was deadly pale, did his eyes flinch from the full regard of hers. At last he slowly said: "Love you, Valerie de Montarnaud? Love you? There is not a woman on earth whom it would be so impossible for me to love."

"Oh!" "Yes, it hurts you; and I am sorry to pain you. There are not even in my heart those poor dreams of love that make us enjoy the pang we can inflict upon her who has deceived and betrayed us. I do not even hate you, Valerie; after this I do not even care to avoid you. I thank you for the work of this last five minutes, for you have put forth all your art to rekindle the fire whose ashes I had feared to disturb, and you have shown me that they are wholly cold and dead. Are you content?"

"Content!" repeated Madame de Montarnaud in a tone of withering scorn. "Yes, for I see that your peasant wife has dragged you utterly down to her own level. I cannot love a man who is no longer a gentleman."

"If it soothes your mortification to speak disparagingly of me, you are very welcome to do so, madame. As to my wife, it is better that you should not speak of her at all, since she is a woman far above your comprehension. Very far above my desires. Pure as the angels, true as light, unselfish and devoted and loving, and with a strong, brave heart that only needs to know the right to follow it, she is not of those among whom you choose your life, madame, nor have you the ability to gauge her. But with her, and with my child, he all my hopes in the future, all my joy in the present; for I love and trust her as I never could have loved and trusted you, Valerie, even had you been true to me."

He left the room, nor did he seek to detain him. In the study he found Father Despard, who waited for him with ill-concealed anxiety. Despard looked at him sternly and reproachfully.

"What was the motive of your plot?" asked he, leaning upon the mantelpiece, and looking down upon the priest, who sat desolately in the shade. "Simply this, my son," replied he, fluently. "I am in this place as a propagandist. My only motive is the nurture and spread of our holy faith in this new country. Madame de Montarnaud is also absorbed, body and soul, in this good work, and it is her money which largely supports the mission. Now, you are the heir, after her child, of most of her property; and it is certainly desirable that you should be consulted as to its disposition. Again, you are a Catholic, detached from the rites and influences of the church, and it is most desirable that you should be led to join with us who represent her, however feebly, and should be brought into charity and sympathy with your fellow-laborers. Now, Madame de Montarnaud felt that you were not in charity with her, and fancied that by a personal interview your differences might be adjusted. I knew that, if I warned you of her presence, you would not visit me, and I consented to this little ruse, by which I brought together two of my children, temporarily estranged, and joined them once more as co-laborers in the holy cause which must to all of us be so much dearer than any personal prejudices or wishes. Was I wrong, my dear pupil?"

"If your explanation is perfectly sincere, father, I should say that you were not so much wrong as you appeared; and that, I had never supposed to be one of your failings. You probably knew beforehand, as well as I know now, the nature of the explanation likely to ensue between Madame de Montarnaud and myself; and had my heart been guarded by a very vivid and honest love for my wife, I can hardly tell the extent of the mischief likely to ensue between your amiable and innocent little device. As it is, no harm is done, unless—and it would be an odd bit of retributive justice on your head, mon pere—unless Madame de Montarnaud finds her zeal for mission work suddenly cooled, and goes back to France, carrying her money with her."

"H'm!" ejaculated the priest, starting a little, but after a moment resettling himself placidly as he replied: "Forewarned is forearmed, my son."

will terrify madame by letting her see that I dimly suspect a motive in her zeal which she has never dared to confess to me."

"And now, father, I will to bed. We will have a long talk tomorrow after mass; and I shall set out upon my journey home as soon as sunset allows me to travel—as soon as Sunday is over, that is."

"What, you yield to these Puritan edicts?" exclaimed the priest contemptuously.

"If I did not, I should taste Puritan discipline," replied the doctor tranquilly. "Besides, father, you must remember, as I have just been telling Madame de Montarnaud, that this land is now my land, and this people my people."

"But never their God your God, I hope, my son," replied the priest solemnly.

"Is there, then, more than one God, my father?" asked Le Baron, significantly.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.
And so the years went softly on in the quaint town beside the sea, until Lazarus Le Baron was a fine, stout lad of 13 years, with his father's stalwart Norman figure and his mother's calm and steadfast eyes. And still it was Time the Perfector, and not Time the Destroyer, that left his mark upon Molly Le Baron's face and form, changing her girlish comeliness to the stately beauty of her matronhood, giving through the expansion of the mind and greater intelligence of the feelings, depth to the eyes, mobility to the mouth, and a greater range of inflection to the voice, while the peaceful and regular life, the calm temper and constant sunshine of her home, conserved the delicacy of her complexion, the youthful roundness of her outlines, and the smoothness of her brow.

So thought her husband, idly watching her as she moved around the room arranging little matters, flecking away specks of dust, painting the lily of spotless cleanliness with yet an added lustre.

"Yes, doctor," she was saying, "I really think a voyage would do you great good. You have been overworked this sickly September; and, at any rate, our cruel winters always tell upon you. Remember the cough you had last year—"

"Yes, I took cold when I was 6 years old, and that was the result," interposed Le Baron, in the grave, quizzical tone in which he met so many of his wife's soliloquies, and to which she now dryly replied:

"I dare say. It was unfortunate; but still, now that you have so good a chance to make a trip to the Havanna and back, and cost you nothing, for Capt. Pinot said before that he would take you at any time for the pleasure of your company—"

"Ah, but, my dear, Capt. Pinot never leaves my company long enough to find out that there is no pleasure in it. Would you have me cheat the worthy mariner?"

"Ah, Francis! don't torment me. When I'm trying to persuade thee to do thyself a service, and not to think of how I'll miss thee, dear." And throwing down the duster, Molly came, and, crouching at her husband's side, laid her folded hands upon his breast, and raised her fair face to his with a irresistible gesture of entreaty and devotion.

Le Baron stooped and kissed her tenderly, then smoothing away the hair from her brow, looked long and earnestly into the clear, good eyes steadfastly upraised to his. It was a minute or two before either spoke; and then he said very gently:

"Molly, thou'rt a fair woman, and better than that, thou'rt a good woman, and strong and brave as thou art sweet. I would I were a better man for thy sake, dear wife."

A lovely morning glow stole over the noonday beauty of the upturned face; and then it hid itself upon his breast, and the arms crept up round his neck, and never a word came from the fond tremulous lips, and never a word was needed.

The door was suddenly thrown open, and a bright, handsome boy stood on the threshold, opened his eyes a little at the unwonted sight, yet with the tact of all the Montarnauds went straight on with his message as if he saw nothing:

"Father, Capt. Pinot has come ashore and bid me ask if you would come off to the Belle Isle to see a passenger of his, a gentleman, he'll be come ashore—a nobleman and very rich."

"Yet not noble enough nor rich enough to keep himself in health, nor cure himself when ill," remarked the doctor, always on the lookout to cut down any aristocratic weeds springing in his son's character.

"No; but the captain spoke as if he were a very great man, and he's not over civil generally."

"H'm! Very great—that might mean dropsy; and not over civil—that may be spleen," said the doctor, musingly as he stepped into the office, and changed his coat and shoes. Lazarus took a little, but glanced at his mother, whose calm eyes were fixed on his, and remained silent.

"Come to the wharf with me, my boy," said the doctor, presently emerging. "Perhaps you can induce the dear delight of going off to the brig."

"That's what I like!" exclaimed the lad, gayly; and down the steep of Leyden street they went, and along the wharf past Pilgrim Rock, distinctly recognized but not specially honored in those early days, to where the captain's gig, manned by two sturdy Jack Tars, lay tossing up and down on the gay October waves.

GLENCOE.

"Advertiser" Agent, John McNell. Glencoe, Jan. 7.—The son of Mr. R. Brown, Appin, was seriously injured Saturday, while attempting to catch on a sleigh loaded with saw logs. He slipped and fell under the sleigh, which passed over his body, breaking five ribs and otherwise injuring him. Still he is expected to recover.

Sunday was the second anniversary of the Glencoe Methodist Church, and the Rev. Mr. McIntyre, of Chatham, preached eloquent sermons both morning and evening to large congregations. There was appropriate music by the choir. Last night they held the anniversary festival, which was a success in every way. The tables were loaded with good things, and the ladies deserve much credit for their excellent management. After everyone had been seated the party retired to the auditorium of the church where an excellent programme was given. The star of the evening was Mr. Ruthven McDonald, of London, whose singing and reciting was very much enjoyed by all. The Glencoe people will always be ready to welcome Mr. McDonald. There was a song by Mrs. Faulds, which was heartily cheered. Rev. Mr. Ross gave a short address, and Mr. Faulds an impromptu recitation. Too much cannot be said of Mr. McDonald, who was ever ready to respond, and his rendering of "The Holy City" was especially enjoyed.

STRATHROY.

("Advertiser" Agent, J. D. Meekles.) Strathroy, Dec. 8.—A regular meeting of the Strathroy Council was held Monday evening at 7.30. Mayor Smith was in the chair, and all the councilors present. The several reports from the different committees were read and confirmed.

Mayor Smith was asked to leave the chair, and Dr. Berdan was elected chairman pro tem. The Doctor read a motion from Deputy Reeve Avery and Councilor Armstrong, thanking the mayor for the kind and courteous treatment that the council had received from his hands during 1895, and passing a hearty vote of thanks. This was very heartily endorsed by the whole Council. Mayor Smith in a few well chosen words feelingly thanked the Council, and complimented them very highly for the way they had assisted him in his work.

Several of the members responded with short speeches. Upon the mayor's motion, a vote of thanks was tendered all of the town officials for the good work they did in 1895. This speaks well for the council of 1896. They have all worked harmoniously together and with the one end in view, the advancement and prosperity of the town.

RAILWAY RUMBLINGS.

The first train of the new Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railroad rolled into the Exchange street station, Buffalo, shortly after 11.30 o'clock Monday afternoon. For the present the trains, aside from engine and tender, will consist of a combination smoking and second class passenger car and a first class passenger coach. The trains are handled by Michigan Central crews and drawn by Michigan Central power from Welland to Buffalo.

BLENHEIM.

Blenheim, Jan. 7.—The death of Mr. E. B. Putnam, an old and respected citizen of Blenheim, occurred yesterday at the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. T. W. Pearson, where he had been confined for only a week. The funeral service will be held tomorrow, at 1.30 p.m., at the above named residence, after which the remains will be conveyed to Evergreen Cemetery for interment.

Excitement ran high in our town last night over the local elections, the chief cause of which was the mayoralty contest. In wards 2 and 3 Mr. VonGunter had rolled up the handsome majority of 44, and everyone was positive that the election was his, but when it was announced from the booth of ward 1 that Mr. Ferguson had a majority of 59 the crowd stood amazed for a moment, and after the necessary mental reckoning had been done and it was found that the latter gentleman was elected by the narrow majority of 3 votes a mighty cheer from his followers went up. The Forsters' band then turned out and serenaded all the councilors who had been elected, and it was nearly 12 o'clock when the usual peace and quiet was restored.

CANADA'S LUMBER TRADE.

Bay City, Mich., Jan. 8.—From the figures in Deputy Collector S. C. Wilson's office, it is ascertained that, in round numbers, 142,000,000 feet of logs were brought from Canada to Bay City during the season of 1895, valued at $1,293,609. And 6,620,000 feet of lumber came from the same source, and about an equal amount was shipped back.

STRUCK DOWN.

I am the son of a British officer and was born at Niagara. I followed the trade of shoemaking until the confinement and continual sitting posture began to tell on me, which was fully 20 years ago. Since then, up to 1886, my life was one of constant pain and misery. At first the pain was like a gnawing sensation over the bladder; becoming worse, it passed up the spine to the kidneys, causing intense suffering, so that I have often fallen to the ground in an agony of pain, perfectly helpless. I have been confined to my bed for weeks and could not urinate without using a catheter. I was never well and had to abandon my trade.

I tried local physicians, a specialist at Detroit, electric belts, shocks, patent medicines, etc., without relief, and felt that death would be a deliverance. At last happening to see an advertisement of Doan's Kidney Pills, I sent and got a box, and the immediate relief I experienced was astonishing. I kept on taking them and soon found I was cured. The agonizing pain stopped and has never returned. The cure has been sure and lasting, and I am glad to let the world know it. I travel up and down the country a great deal and have seen many equally bad cases cured by these pills. A. H. FLECHER, Kingsville, Ont.

Doan's Kidney Pills are sold by all dealers for 50 cents per box, or six boxes for $2.50, or will be mailed on receipt of price by the Doan Kidney Pill Co., Toronto.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher.

That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.
