QUEBEC, March 26th, 1861. The Legislative Council got through with the consideration of the Speech, on Thursday, and the day following, presented their answer to His Excellency. They met for an hour on Saturday morning, and adjourned till Tuesday, thus taking but one holiday, and showing an example to the House of Assembly, who, after presenting their Address on Saturday, adjourned till the 2nd of April. The various clauses of the Speech and amendments thereto, exclusive of the last paragraph, were pushed on with little delay in both Houses. The discussion in the Assembly of course, involved the question of Representation by Population, and the Federal union. It would, probably, be rather premature, to take any action on the former, as the census is not yet complete; indeed, to use a quotation, "any legis a ion not based upon clearly defined data and reliable statistics, is ill-judged and unwise." withstanding this, Mr. Ferguson moved in amendment, "That while this House will give its best consideration to the various subjects upon which your Excellency has touched, it cannot close this Address without recording its regret that your Excellency was not advised to allude to the Census of the People, which has been recently taken, and which this House cannot but regard as preliminay to legislation upon the great question of Parliamentary Reform based upon the numbers and wealth of the peo ole, irrespective of the line of demargation which istinguished the Eastern and Western section of the Province, prior to the Legislative Union, 1841."
